HOLMGREN'S NEXT GOAL: A CONSISTENT CONTENDER

The View From The Top: Head coach Mike Holmgren, who admits to "high expectations" for the 1993 season, sees a bright future for his football team.

by Lee Remmel
Editorial Director

Anticipation, it has long been alleged, is greater than realization.

If so, Packer loyalists and Head Coach Mike Holmgren are more than willing to take the risk—if risk there be—inherent in their burgeoning excitement about the 1993 season and what it holds for the Green and Gold.

One thing already is a given: The level of anticipation among the faithful, heartened by last season's success and the shrewd, sure-handed direction of Packer football operations by General Manager Ron Wolf, is easily the highest it has been within recent memory.

Holmgren, whose calm and composed exterior belies a high degree of internal intensity, shares their expectancy in the wake of the 1992 record—second best for the Packers in the past 20 years—and one of the most dramatic developments in recent Packer history, the celebrated off-season signing of defensive superstar Reggie White, the prize unrestricted free agent available as free agency came to the NFL...Not to mention the addition of that perennial Pro Bowl wideout, Mark Clayton.

But, also a realist, the former field general is inclined to temper his enthusiasm with prudent restraint, aware that taking the next step is a challenge of substantial proportions, given the lofty level of competition in the National Football League and a more demanding schedule.

"Expectations are high, and I want them to be high."

"Expectations are high, and I want 'em to be high," he said during a preseason overview. "I'm excited—I'll be honest—I'm excited. My expectations are high. But I have to say we're just in the beginning stages. We can get a lot better. We're going to be pretty good, but we can get a lot better, as long as—Ron (Wolf) and I have talked about it many times—as long as we don't make emotional decisions, just start getting all hyped and excited and do something.

"As long as we can approach things in a rational manner, and he does some of things I ask him to do," Holmgren said, delivering the last phrase with tongue in cheek, "we'll be fine.

"But we're still building. Somebody asked me, 'Are the days of the 4-and-12 season over, or the 6-and-10 season over?' because I know in years past, the Packers have had a good year, maybe a couple good years and then, all of a sudden, back down. And then maybe a good year in five years, and back down."

The Packer headmaster, saluted as "NFC Coach of the Year" for his accomplishment as a first year head coach, then proceeded to note that avoidance of this unsettling and unproductive pattern is the next major objective in his long-range program.

"The whole idea behind the organization the way it is now is to build a team that's consistently a playoff-caliber team," he said. "So I'd like to get to the point where the days of the 4-and-12 season are over...Unless you just get decimated by injuries to your key players, you shouldn't be up and down like that—if you're just being solid. Now to transfer, then, that playoff-caliber team to the Super Bowl, you need a great deal of luck and good fortune, particularly with injuries. I would say this next season coming up, we don't have the depth that we will have in a couple years, so while Ken O'Brien gives us a little comfort there, if something were to happen to Brett (Favre), okay, that would hurt the football team. If something were to happen to Sterling Sharpe injury-wise, that would hurt the football team. I don't know if we're ready yet to overcome those types of injuries.

"But, I can tell you this, we are a better football team...We came close last year. We came close and I think probably, again, exceeded some people's expectations. We're not going to sneak up on anybody this year. They're going to be ready to play us, but we're going to be ready to play them, too. And the idea of playing night games (three prime TV appearances), I'm excited about it. I'm excited (because)...that's a sign of respect from the league. That, for whatever reason, they say, 'Okay, you guys can be on Monday night TV—and you can be on a couple Sunday night games'...They don't just hand those out, you know. So I'm excited."

Holmgren is confident that what he considered the major obstacle to on-field success when he arrived in Green Bay a year ago has been overcome. Sensing a marked difference in attitude, he said, "I think because of our season last year, and the fact we won those six games in a row down the stretch, and some good things did happen late in the game, I think the attitude is different. One of our goals was to develop a positive attitude and the idea the glass was half full instead of half empty, and I think we did that."

Equally significant to him, in retrospect, was setting "a standard of excellence, or a standard of play, when we first came in here...I talked about that to the team and, without it being a threat, or without coaching from fear, as I put it, there were four or five players who chose not to believe what I was telling them—and that I was not going to accept anything less than doing it this way. And they've done it a certain way most of their lives and that was fine—and they felt that was fine, and they didn't believe me.

"At any rate, I was able to send a message to the team about one week after I arrived in town, and those fellows are either playing somewhere else now or not playing football. And that was a shame because, when I talked to them, I said, 'Now listen, if you hang in there with me, before all is said and done, you're going to acquire something very special. It's going to be an exciting time here...I can't tell you exactly when it's going to happen but, if you hang in there and do the things we ask you to do, at some point we're all going to be coming into this meeting hooting and hollering, and crying and the whole deal, and just because it's going to be very exciting. Those of you who choose not to believe me, it's going to be too bad because you're going to be watching on television. You're going to read it in the newspaper, knowing that you could have been part of that."'

Holmgren's optimism about advancing toward "something very special" in the 1993 season stems in part from the Packers' somewhat surprising success in the free agent market—following the advent of free agency that came during the offseason, a reality he addressed with typical candor.

"This free agency thing has changed a lot of what football is going to be, I think," he said. "The idea of a team holding together a core of players for nine-ten years, like we had in San Francisco, for example, might be gone. Five years now, they are free agents...Baseball has had to deal with this for a long time. The thing that we have that helps just a little bit, we do have a salary cap that could kick in, or everyone expects it to kick in, next season. So that helps just a little bit.

"But what I found in the free agency is this—that the Green Bay Packers can compete with anybody. There was some feeling that if it went to free agency in football that the small market teams would be shut out by the New Yorks, the Los Angeles—the more, quote unquote... attractive places to play. Well, that is not true. That is not true at all. We will present to a player—and I'm not just talking of Reggie White, but that was just a marvelous thing for our franchise to be able to sign Reggie—we will present as attractive a package to an athlete as any team in football. And we were able to do that this year.

"But what I found in the free agency is this—that the Green Bay Packers can compete with anybody."

"Now, we have our own style. He did not meet the governor, or have the cheerleaders or the confetti, or buy 'em leather coats, or all the stuff that went on during free agency. What we did is we talked to them about what was important for the athlete...If you have a family—what about the community? If you don't—opportunity to play. I wanted them to meet my coaching staff, I wanted them to meet Bob Harlan and Ron Wolf and the people that make the Packers go. The people in an organization mean the most to those athletes. I wanted them to meet their teammates, the guys who played for us already...Talk to those guys—ask them what they feel about what we're doing. And we were able to sign some good people in this free agency thing.

"We had trades—John Stephens and Ken O'Brien are the two biggest ones, probably. Ken solidifies our quarterback position—he's a great player in his own right; he started in the league for eight years. And then John Stephens, I think, can be the outstanding running back that he was as a rookie and a second year player and a third year player. These last two years they (the Patriots) moved him to fullback and he hasn't been as productive as he would have liked, but we expect great things out of him."

Contributions via this year's draft, coupled with free agent acquisitions such as ex-Chief Bill Maas and White, also have Holmgren anticipating major improvement in the defensive performance.

John Stephens, a former 1,000-yard rusher for New England, is counted upon to upgrade the Packers' running game. He was acquired from the Patriots in an offseason draft choice transaction.

"Bill Maas was a Pro Bowl nose tackle. I'm hoping he has two or three good years left. He's played in the league a long time and he is in great shape, and really likes it here—and wants to be here.

"Wayne Simmons and George Teague, just to name our first two picks, are outstanding players and should contribute right away," Holmgren predicted. "I think we've set up a defense now that can really shut down people—I mean can really put the glove on you.

"Now, we also moved some people... Corey Harris, who was an offensive player for us, we moved him to corner. And we think—I can't give you an example of an athlete that has made that transition in one year—but we think he has the possibility to start for us at corner. He is that good. If he can do that...we really are going to be good on defense. I mean, not just good—really good. And if we can be really good on defense, we've got a shot. I mean we've got a chance to be a very good football team."

Holmgren also has fewer concerns on the offensive side of the football, notably at quarterback, where Brett Favre returns for his first full season as the starter, and at wide receiver, with the addition of Clayton.

"Brett should be better just for the fact that he's now seen everything, in one time through," the Packers' field leader asserted. "The concern with a young player is how he handles his notoriety and fame. He got a lot at a very early age...But I think he's handled it very well, and I know he has worked hard in the offseason, and that was really a goal of ours. So he should be a better football player.

"Now, he had an outstanding year last year. Statistically, who knows?...But he should be a better quarterback because now he should be more confident, more relaxed, those things."

In his assessment, Holmgren also noted the transfer of second year pro Edgar Bennett to fullback, where he is listed as the potential starter.

Explaining that process, he observed, "We waived Harry Sydney...which was a difficult thing for me, because Harry and I were close, but it was something we had to do. I think it'll work out good for Harry as well as the Packers. We had to give our young guys a chance to step forward, and if Harry was there, it would be too easy for me to say, 'Just let let Harry do it'...And for us to become a better football team, those types of decisions have to be made—and it was a difficult one."

Assessing the impact of Clayton's arrival upon the scene, Holmgren said, "To have a veteran receiver who has really accomplished quite a lot in this league is exciting for us, and he will be a great influence on our younger players as well.

"He gives us leadership, he gives us a receiver who's done it—who has accomplished a lot already in the league. And I believe he is the number two touchdown receiver in the NFL behind Jerry Rice.

"It will be a competitive situation, though," Holmgren cautioned, "at that receiver position, and he knows that.

"We didn't throw many passes over there last year—we emphasized Sterling—and a lot of that had to do with Brett's confidence and what he felt about plays," the Packers' field leader observed. "But, for us to be most effective on offense, we have to have a better balance than we had last year."

Elsewhere on offense, Holmgren acknowledged one significant question remained to be answered as training camp began: Finding an effective successor to the departed Tootie Robbins at right tackle.

The situation there, he suggested, awaits a solution.

"We have Tunch Ilkin (a free agent from the Pittsburgh Steelers and a 13-year veteran), who has played a long time and who will be tried at right tackle...And Joe Sims, and Earl Dotson—those fellows will compete for it, Earl being a rookie. So we have to find out what we're going to do there.

"I'll miss Tootie, and he was great for us last year, but you know the team is in a state of ongoing change...So you just have to find a player and make him a player, and press on.

"But the rest of the line—I think they played pretty well last year. I expect them to play better this year. But, for me, they played hard, they played aggressively... they're okay.

"The offensive line could be very good. Again, I think they came on and had a fine season last year. We've made some changes there... Rich Moran is coming back off a knee injury and feels good. Jim Campen's our center and kind of captain of the ship in there...Harry Galbreath is a fine right guard.

"In years past, you'd look at our line and they're big, big men—I mean big, tall guys," Holmgren observed. "Harry is about 6-2, about 285, which is big, now. But compared to some of the other guys, you're going to see a guy that looks little. But what he can do—he's tough as nails and he can run. You will see him pulling and leading sweeps...and he's like a cat. He's really a good football player."

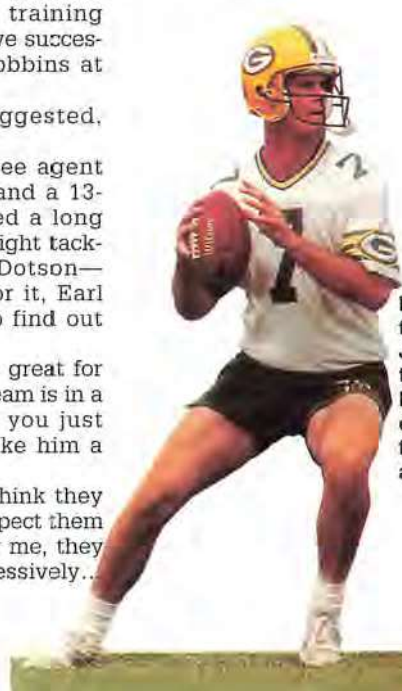
Having delivered a generally positive appraisal of the personnel in hand—in the wake of major changes and a productive year on the job, Holmgren moved to the proverbial bottom line.

"We're a better football team than we were last year."

"We're a better football team than we were last year," he said. "Now how many wins that equates to, I don't know. We had some breaks go our way and then I thought we were hurt by some things last year. But I know we're better. But we play a more difficult schedule.

"I'm expecting us to continue to improve each year. Again, expectations are going to be high and that's exciting. But a little realism has to creep in somewhere.

"But," he summed up, "we're on schedule, and I like the direction we're going... ©



Ken O'Brien, acquired from the New York Jets in an offseason trade, provides Holmgren and his staff excellent insurance for starter Brett Favre at quarterback.

FAVRE'S A FRANCHISE

by Dale Hofmann
The Milwaukee Sentinel

Brett Favre hobbled off the field last December suffering from turf toe, a sprained ankle and a separated shoulder, but it could have been worse. He could have had an identity crisis.

He could have come reeling out of the Humphrey Dome wondering whether his magic season was a cruel joke and he was a disappointment in the biggest game of the year. Or he could have left remembering that he was going to the Pro Bowl even if the Packers weren't going to the playoffs.

Really, who was this guy?

Was he the young fun seeker Ron Wolf bought with a No. 1 draft choice, prompting Packer fans to wonder if their general manager had been tackled a few too many times himself? Or was he the most promising quarterback to come along in years?

When Wolf spent the 17th pick in the 1992 draft on him, he thought of Favre as "a blacksmith."

"He's a guy like the quarterbacks in this division," Wolf said. "They're not going to be in the Hall of Fame. They're the guys who line up, get the stuff kicked out of them all the time, and every week they are in there."

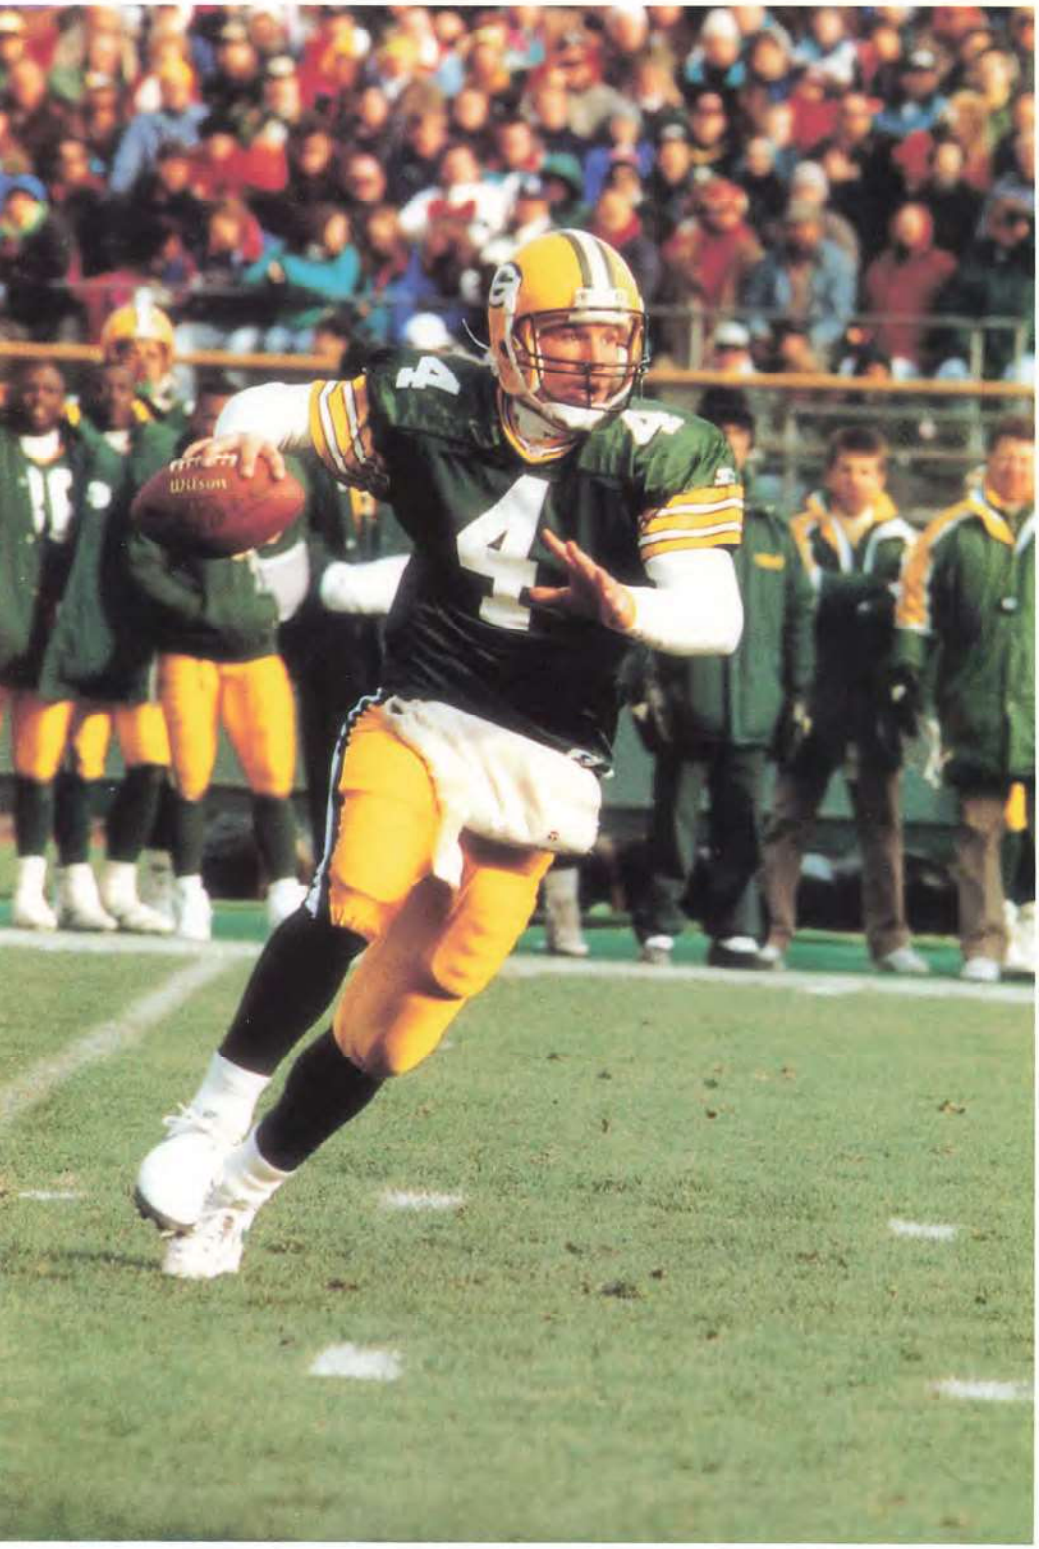
By the end of the season, Wolf was saying something entirely different. He was comparing him to Troy Aikman and Steve Young instead of Jim Harbaugh and Rodney Peete.

So what do we call him now? Blacksmith or thoroughbred?

To Favre, it's a horse apiece.

At the impressionable age of 23 with just one full season in the NFL, he understands that he has a lot to learn about football. But he's a recognized expert on at least one subject. He knows Brett Lorenzo Favre—who he is, where he's been and most important, where he wants to go.

"When you mention Aikman and Young, those are the best there are at this point," he says. "I'm not going to say I'm there yet. But I'm not going to say I'm far from it either.



RINGTHEBELL.TV on Archive.org

Quarterback Brett Favre, poised to unlimber his passing arm on the run, had a storybook season in 1992, his first as a Packer and only his second in the NFL. Pressed into service early in Game 3 following an injury to Don Majkowski, he led the Packers to a 9-7 record—their second best in 20 years—and set two Packer passing records in the process, for passing percentage (64.11%) and most consecutive 200-yard passing games (11).

"Just being mentioned in that category is an honor."

More like a miracle actually. Favre had thrown exactly five passes for the Falcons when the Packers acquired him on Feb. 10, and they all had one thing in common. They were incomplete.

He had a highly impressive college career at Southern Mississippi to recommend him, but he also had a questionable work ethic and two veteran quarterbacks standing between him and any appreciable playing time in Green Bay. Starting for the Packers was improbable. Tying with Aikman for the most completions in the NFC and playing in the Pro Bowl was ridiculous.

"But I can't say I expected to be in the Pro Bowl or to be in the record books with Sterling Sharpe...."

But it happened anyway. One of the quarterbacks ahead of him didn't sign, and the other one got hurt. Four games into the season, the No. 1 job was his.

Eleven games later, the Packers were on the brink of the playoffs before getting pasted by the Vikings in their finale.

Surprised? Sure, Favre was surprised. But not astounded.

"It's hard to explain how I feel about that," he said as he looked back on the 1992 season. "I always have goals, and while I didn't know what would happen, I always felt if I could get into a game, I would do well. But I can't say I expected to be in the Pro Bowl or to be in the record books with Sterling Sharpe or to be in the top five in the ratings.

"I'm not going to sit here and say I didn't think it was possible. I have been through something like this before in college. That's not the same, of course. This is the biggest game in the world. But I knew things could happen. They just happened quicker than I thought."

They happened the same way for the Packers last season. Picked to challenge Tampa Bay for the Central Division dog house, they battled Minnesota for the penthouse instead. A playoff berth would have had Green Bay fans dancing in the streets. As it was, they did a little two-step in front of their TV screens and looked forward eagerly to next year.

If anything, the team took that final 27-7 pratfall in Minneapolis harder than their supporters.

"When the season started, I didn't think we would ever have a six-game winning streak, but once it happened, we all thought we could make the playoffs," Favre recalled. "Then it was, Let's go for it! We wound up being disappointed with the season.

"But no team will take the Green Bay Packers lightly now, and that's the way it should be."

Certainly, no one will take their quarterback lightly, and maybe that's the same thing. Long after the league had begun noticing the Packers' young leader, the rest of the country caught up in a nationally televised game at Houston.

He had a string of 111 passes without an interception broken there, but he left the ESPN audience and the Oiler staff impressed. "He's a young Dan Marino as far as I can see," said defensive coordinator Jim Eddy. "Everything else you can get to surround him. Without the trigger guy, you're going to be an up and down team."

Coaches of course have been known to blow a puff or two of smoke about players they may have to face again. Other players on the other hand tend to be more candid. And Favre does quite well with that audience, too.

"Brett's a great player," said New York Giants defensive end Leonard Marshall. "He's competitive with a great perception of his leadership role. He inspires, you can see that. They really rally around him."

Favre appreciates the sentiment, but he'll also tell you that quarterbacks and head coaches get more credit and more blame than they deserve. He's able to ignore much of that. On the other hand, he would have to live in a cave not to notice the fuss that's being made over him.

It's flattering and it could be dangerous if he allows it to affect the way he plays. But Favre isn't worried about that.

"I know what kind of person I am," he said, "and I know the people around me won't change. They'll always keep me in line.

"My dad says it's not whether you drive a Mercedes, it's knowing you can own one."

Before long, Favre should be able to buy the dealership. A $360,000 base salary makes him one of the biggest bargains in the NFL, but Wolf plans to change that soon. And while Favre purely loves the game for its own sake, he will not turn down the money.

He insists he'll be the guy he's always been, even with another zero or two in his adjusted gross income. The same guy Wolf gambled his credibility on.

"Ron Wolf knew something about me that nobody else knew," he said, "and I'm going to make him look good.

"You're always going to find people who are jealous of you, who say you're making all of that money. I just accept that without trying to change anything.

"It's more exciting being who you are."

And Brett Favre knows exactly who that is. What's more, the excitement is contagious.

SHARPE LETS HIS FINGERS DO THE TALKING

by Michael Bauman
The Milwaukee Journal

No professional football player ever caught more passes in a single season than Sterling Sharpe did in 1992. Beyond that, all is conjecture.

Sterling Sharpe is the consummate private man in a public job. Any attempt to shed light on the "real" Sterling Sharpe is probably based on third-hand knowledge and worse. This is frustrating to those of us who write about these matters for a living, but in the end, nothing diminishes what he has achieved. His performance speaks volumes about what he is. And what he is, in the land of facts, beyond subjective judgments, out of the reach of curiosity, is one of the great receivers in the history of the National Football League.

Sharpe caught 108 passes for the Green Bay Packers in 1992, breaking the all-time mark of 106 for a single season set by Art Monk of the Washington Redskins in 1984. Sharpe caught every pass known to civilized man; outs and ins and little swing passes and long bombs. He caught them in traffic and he made yardage after the catches. He caught them, in the final weeks of the season, with hands that were so swollen that he could not make a fist. "An occupational hazard," he said.

He scored 13 touchdowns on pass catches and he gained a league-leading 1,461 receiving yards. He was fast and strong and durable and precise. He was a marvelously talented athlete and—don't let that smile on his face confuse you—a tough-minded competitor. He was a man at the very top of his trade.

So what did he think about this epic achievement, this season that put him alone statistically at the top of NFL receivers?

"Honestly, who cares?", he said in a recent interview with Pro Football Weekly. "As long as we win, if I catch 40, I'm happy. One hundred and eight was just a situation that our team was put in. I don't have to prove that I can play, that I can have good hands, that I can play a full season, that I can catch 100 balls. As far as having to prove anything, that ended three or four years ago."

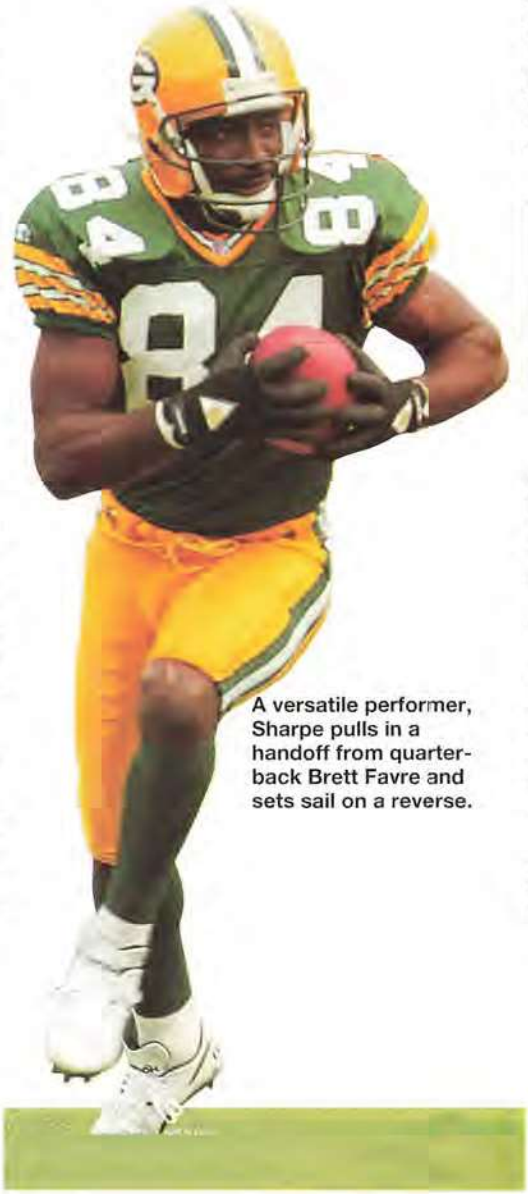
Yes, many of the questions were doubtlessly answered when he led the league with 90 catches in 1989. The questions about Sharpe have nothing to do with athleticism, ability, desire, toughness; the standard sports questions. He has answered all of those, in just five pro seasons. The rest of the questions don't appear to interest him at all.

You can't be this good without drawing a crowd, off the field as well as on the field. The better you are, the more people want to know. That's the nature of society, the nature of media and the nature of all the attention that is focused on sports celebrities. Maybe it's unhealthy. Maybe it's absurd. But that's the way it is.

Sterling Sharpe doesn't play that game. He generally does not speak to the Wisconsin sports media, especially the newspaper folks. He will, on infrequent occasions, do interviews with national media types.

Sharpe was unhappy with some of the printed accounts of his rookie 1988 season. He felt that there was too much emphasis placed on dropped balls. Still, he spoke after that, but less in each succeeding year, to the point where last season, it was accepted that he was simply not talking.

He isn't big on autographs, either. It's a contradiction of sorts. He is known to work off-season with young people back home in South Carolina. Those of us who have seen him speak to children in Milwaukee schools know that he is articulate, funny, direct, effective, in these sessions.



A versatile performer, Sharpe pulls in a handoff from quarterback Brett Favre and sets sail on a reverse.

"My feeling is, if it ain't broke, why fix it? I am comfortable with the way things have gone in my career and I don't want to change it."

Obviously, he can speak. Just as obviously, he does not want to speak. In an interview with The Sporting News, responding to the question of why he did not speak to the local media, Sharpe said:

"I have nothing to talk about. It's not like I don't like the media guys in Green Bay. But people have a way of writing things so something negative will come out of it. I don't want anything to come out that will be negative or twisted that offends my teammates. They are my friends. They are too important to me to lose them. So I just don't say anything."

In the same interview, on the question of whether breaking the pass-catching record would lead him to change his position with the media, he said:

"My feeling is, if it ain't broke, why fix it? I am comfortable with the way things have gone in my career and I don't want to change it. That's what has been great about the success the team is having. It has brought attention to other guys. I love it. Put attention on them and get it off me. I have been considered one of the best receivers. I've been to Pro Bowls. Now it's time to pass the attention on to someone else."

It's much the same thing on a more general level. Sterling Sharpe is not running for public office in Wisconsin. He is not a glad-hander, not a back-slapper. Green Bay is simply where he works. As he told Pro Football Weekly:

"I'm not there to make friends; I'm not there to be well liked....I know there are a lot of people in Wisconsin that have a problem with the way I do things off the field, but I'm there to help the Green Bay Packers win football games, and that's the only reason for me being there. I don't want a lot of people catering to me. I kind of want to be left alone."

Some people resent Sharpe's attitude. Sportswriters merely represent the public's interest in sports. When you shun them, you are basically shunning the public, the people who pay the freight. Making millions of dollars for playing a game, answering a few questions shouldn't be too much to ask.

But the other side of it is that the man isn't committing any illegal acts here. Nowhere in the First Amendment does it say that you have to talk to reporters. And, you have to give the guy some perverse credit. By not playing this part of the game, he is forfeiting the chance to make additional millions in endorsements. Maybe he does play in a relatively tiny media market, but he could still have parlayed the biggest single pass-catching season in NFL history into some major advertising money. Maybe it's as simple as he says it is: He wants to play football. And then, he wants to be left alone.

And in one other non-traditional way, sending no message is sending a good message. Sharpe speaks to young people and they automatically listen to him because he is a gridiron hero, a national celebrity. But when he speaks to these groups, he takes care to tell them to do the right thing, not just because he says so, but because they have to take responsibility for their own lives.

"Yeah, I'm Sterling Sharpe, yeah, I play for the Green Bay Packers, but that's not even important," he told an elementary school audience in Milwaukee. "We're going to have to give the responsibility to you to get it done. You're going to have to take care of yourself and your friends."

So Sharpe, implicitly and explicitly, rejects the whole "role model for youth" syndrome that falls upon contemporary athletic stars. "If you have to look past your dinner table for somebody else, if you have to look to Los Angeles, or Chicago or Green Bay, Wisconsin, for a role model, then there's something wrong," he said in the Pro Football Weekly interview.

He's right. Maybe it's convenient for him to say that, given his desire not to be a celebrity, but he is still correct. There is not an ounce of hypocrisy about his position and for that he can easily be admired.

Apart from all the debates about whether it is appropriate for him not to be Mr. Endlessly Cooperative with the media, apart from all the unfulfilled curiosity about what moves him, what are we left with on the topic of Sterling Sharpe? A lot. A pass catcher of unprecedented achievement.

"I know I might be stepping on somebody's toes, but I can't imagine that Don

Sharpe, on the loose against the Rams, had one of his most productive afternoons of the season against the Californians, snaring two touchdown passes in the second quarter en route to a 28-13 Packer victory.

Sterling Sharpe is congratulated by friend and foe alike after catching his 107th pass of the 1992 season to set a new NFL season record December 27th. The foe is represented by the Vikings' Carl Lee (34), who happens to be one of Sharpe's business partners. Sharpe later caught a 108th pass.

A smiling Sterling Sharpe responds to questions from the TV booth during an interview at Milwaukee County Stadium following the Packers' 38-10 victory over the Detroit Lions December 6th.

Hutson was any better than Sterling Sharpe," Packers general manager Ron Wolf said. At one time, that might have been regarded as heresy. Hutson, who played for the Packers from 1933 to 1945, is a Hall of Famer who defined the position. But after last season, no comparison between Sterling Sharpe and anybody seems far-fetched.

Sharpe was successful in former Packer Coach Lindy Infante's system. But in Coach Mike Holmgren's more varied and less predictable system, he was closer to unstoppable. The opposition marvels at, and worries about, the combination of Sharpe's abilities and Holmgren's designs.

"In Lindy's system, the receivers ran very precise routes. They ran the same routes over and over," said Tony Dungy, defensive coordinator of the Minnesota Vikings. "In this system, there are a lot of different routes. Sterling gets to do different things. There's not one thing you can zone in on; he runs all the patterns, and they move him around.

"You have to give coach Holmgren and [offensive coordinator] Sherm Lewis a lot of credit. They put him in a lot of spots. They make it hard for you to know where he's going to be."

Of course, all the great offensive schemes in the world wouldn't mean much without the skill and the will to implement them. Again, Sharpe has set himself apart from the merely good.

"There are a lot of great receivers out there, but only a few who are special," Dungy said. "The intangibles play a big part in this game, because everybody has talent. His commitment, his will to win, his desire to be the best....that's what makes him special.

"The thing I like most about Sterling is that he wants the ball. The great receivers think they're open all the time. In a crucial situation, they want the quarterback to throw them the ball. And when the ball goes in the air, they think it's theirs.

"There are a lot of good receivers out there, but only a few who are special."

"You get hit a lot when you catch 100 passes, especially in their system where they don't go up the field that often. He catches a lot of balls in traffic, so heart and desire is a big part of his success."

So, at the end of the day, you find out more about Sterling Sharpe by watching him play than by trying to talk to him. He's a wide receiver at the top of his profession. He wants to be great. He wants the Green Bay Packers to win. He wants to be left alone. We all appreciate him, but we still do not believe that three out of four is enough.

We demand words, tapes, sound bites, photo opportunities. What Sterling Sharpe gives us instead is a picture of him in action, repeated countless times: He catches a pass. He eludes a defender. He runs over another defender. He drags a third with him, for the first down, the touchdown, whatever the big play was that the Green Bay Packers absolutely had to have. It's a picture of all sorts of athletic ability in combination with intelligence and fierce determination.

No, he probably did not publicly expand on this catch after the game, with either a painstaking technical explanation, or a cute, catchy quote. But watching, you still found out something. Sterling Sharpe's play probably told you more about him than any amount of words could tell.

WHITE EXPECTS TO WIN IN GREEN BAY

by Tom Mulhern
The Milwaukee Sentinel

It's a typically quiet Sunday in May in Green Bay and Reggie White, still in uniform and sweat pants from a morning minicamp practice, gazes out a window from an office in the Packers' administration building at the lazy flow of traffic passing by the stadium.

"I've always admired Vince Lombardi," White says. "But I understand more now when he said, 'There's three things you've got to concern yourself with—God, family and the Green Bay Packers.'

"That's all you can concern yourself with here. There's nothing else."

Only three days in a Packer uniform and, already, White can quote from Lombardi. He's off to a good start.

White smiles as he talks about the pace of life he expects to find in Green Bay. In no way are his words meant as a slam toward the city. On the contrary, after a couple of the most tumultuous months of his life, White is very much looking forward to some serenity.

At least off the field. On the field, the only player in National Football League history with more career sacks (124) than games played (121) is still bent on creating the same sort of mayhem that he did in eight dominating seasons with Philadelphia, which included seven straight trips to the Pro Bowl.

"I don't expect anything less than to go out and give everything I've got and try to inspire everybody else to do the same," White says. "And give them an opportunity to inspire me, too."

There has been much to be inspired about since White, the premier prize in the first year of free agency, shocked the rest of the NFL by shunning the likes of Washington and San Francisco to sign with the Packers.

"His presence means a great deal," Packers linebacker Brian Noble says. "I think the acquisition of Reggie White, along with the other players we've acquired, shows the people upstairs are committed to winning.

"He is part of that commitment. When you have a player the caliber of Reggie White, it brings a certain attitude with it. An electricity into this locker room that's fun to see. The excitement is building."

White's decision to come to Green Bay came after six weeks of soul-searching that took him on a whirlwind tour of seven NFL cities. It was like nothing he had ever been through before.

"There were times I almost cried, I was so desperate to make the right decision," White says.

Having never played for a championship team at any level, White talked longingly about his desire to win a Super Bowl. As an ordained Baptist minister, he also spoke passionately about his ministry and his commitment to helping with the problems of the inner city. In the end, he said he would go where God told him to go.

"It consumed him, it really did," agent Jimmy Sexton says of White's decision. "For the six weeks we were in this process, it was not easy. I'll be honest with you, Reggie handicapped himself a little bit by putting too many priorities and criteria on the decision.

"What I mean by that is trying to look for the utopia of football and there's not a place like that."

In the days after accepting the Packers' four-year, $17 million offer, White was attacked in some circles for only caring about the money. White says he has not been hurt by what has been said and written about him, but the people saying those things fail to understand everything that went into his decision.

"People criticize and say, 'He went for the money,'" White says. "I don't owe anybody an explanation. The people who know me know the agony I went through to try and make this decision and make the right decision. This ended up being the best situation for me. I don't have to get in the paper or get on TV and give anybody an explanation of why I'm a Green Bay Packer."

At the press conference announcing his signing, White talked about needing "to feel peace about where I wanted to be."

Following his first minicamp with the Packers, he's as convinced as he ever was that he made the right choice.

"He loves it," Sexton says. "He has never had a single regret about what he did."

If ever there was somebody who embodied Lombardi's tenets about faith, family and football, it's White.

Faith: "A lot's been written about his Christianity," Packers defensive line coach Greg Blache says. "I tell you what, when you meet him, he just exudes it. It comes out all over him. He's genuinely a good person."

White's religious convictions have helped inspire his commitment to helping the underprivileged, especially black children living in the inner cities.

"I've always, even as a kid, been committed to young people," White says.

On Fridays after practice in Philadelphia the last couple years, White would take his wife, Sara, and his two children, Jeremy and Jecolia, with him into the worst neighborhoods in the city to preach and talk to the people.

"I don't expect anything less than to go out and give everything I've got and try to inspire everybody else to do the same."

Reggie, in green and gold, demonstrates his agility for Packer defensive coaches during a mini-camp drill.

"They saw me, my wife and children and the people that came down with us, as hope," White says. "They wanted to go home with us, the kids in particular. The old ladies were sweet. They were just so excited that we were down there."

Family: Sara White shares completely in her husband's devotion to worthwhile causes.

"She does pretty much all the paperwork and my scheduling," White says. "She does a lot of work. One of the reasons I'm glad we're coming up here (to Green Bay), she does a whole lot to the point where she gets tired. She's really interested in going to school. I think Green Bay will give us (that) opportunity.

"That's one of the things that attracted me to Green Bay."

It was said during the recruitment of White that his wife preferred Cleveland where she is from. But White says she shares in his excitement about coming to Green Bay.

"She's excited and the reason she's excited is because she sees that I'm happy," White says. "She didn't interfere with any part of my decision. When I told her, 'What do you think about going to Green Bay?' She said, 'Wherever you think you're going to have an opportunity to win, that's where we're going and I'll go with you.'"

Football: White is simply a future Hall of Famer and one of the best defensive ends ever to play the game.

"If you had to build a defense and you had a choice of one guy, that'd be your man," Packers nose tackle John Jurkovic says of White.

The first thing you notice about White in person is his size. Even without pads, White is immense. He's 6 feet 5 and usually plays at about 285 pounds, although he admittedly was slightly overweight at the minicamp.

"The first time I ever saw him, just standing next to him, I looked like a little boy," Jurkovic says. "I looked like his son. The man is huge. I was in awe just looking at him."

And, of course, White can move. It's his combination of power and speed that have made him such a fearsome pass rusher. Although much of his reputation has come from battering quarterbacks, he's equally effective against the run.

"He doesn't do a lot of pretty things," Packers defensive end Matt Brock notes. "He's not real flashy. He just works hard and kind of slugs around and gets things done. He's powerful and he's quick. He gets around corners on people, but I think he'd just as soon go through somebody than to try and get around them—which I like.

"That puts him in a position to make more plays than just hitting the quarterback. If you're going through people, you can react to the draw or a counter play coming at you."

White says he was made to feel comfortable right away with the Packers and he appreciates the fact he's not being counted on single-handedly to take the team to the Super Bowl.

"It's important that he lead but it's also important that everyone knows he's one part of this team," Coach Mike Holmgren says.

Noble notes correctly that even with a talented surrounding cast in Philadelphia, White wasn't able to reach the Super Bowl.

"We realize Reggie White is not the reason we're going to go to the Super Bowl," Noble says. "We're going to win as a team. He's just an integral part of that team, but he's going to help our team."

Do the Packers have to win a Super Bowl in the next four years for White to be convinced he made the right decision coming here?

"No, but I want to," White says.

Then he pauses for a second and changes his mind.

FREE AGENTS
FIND AN UNEXPECTED HOME

by Tom Mulhern
The Milwaukee Sentinel

When Tunch Ilkin joined the fight for free agency, he wasn't doing it for himself.

Ilkin, a former players' representative with the Pittsburgh Steelers who has spent 13 years in the National Football League, has long been a supporter of unrestricted free agency, but he thought he was doing it for the players who would follow him.

Especially in 1987, when Ilkin walked the picket lines for the second time as an NFL player, and free agency seemed such a long way off.

Six years later, with Ilkin expected to lose his starting job at right tackle with the Steelers, he took advantage of free agency to come to Green Bay, where he will be given a chance to win a starting job.

"To be quite honest with you, I really didn't feel I was going to benefit from free agency," Ilkin said. "I talked to guys a lot in the past and said, 'We're fighting this battle for you. You guys are the future. You will benefit.'

"For me to benefit, it was a bit of a shock."

Mike Prior, 29, never felt free agency would be for him, either. Prior entered the league as a seventh-round draft choice of Tampa Bay in 1985. He played on special teams as a rookie but was out of football the following year. He was close to giving up on his professional career when he was cut by the Indianapolis Colts in training camp in 1987.

But Prior got another chance that year in the strike-replacement games and went on to start at free safety for the Colts for the next five seasons. When the Packers lost Chuck Cecil in free agency to Phoenix, they went after Prior.

"I never thought I'd be around when it (free agency) happened," Prior said. "It happened at a great time. I really didn't go into the off-season thinking I'll be a free agent or what have you. I guess the way things worked out it worked out to my benefit."

Ilkin and Prior are riding the wave of a new era in football, one in which players with five years of experience or more in the league have a say in where they want to play.

"To finally have a free system that allows the majority of the players to choose where they want to play is something we've always strived for," Ilkin said.

To the surprise of some people around the league, several prominent free agents ended up choosing Green Bay.

"Our coaches have done just a tremendous job of selling the Green Bay Packers to the rest of the players in the National Tunch Ilkin, a mainstay of the Pittsburgh Steelers' offensive line for 13 seasons, is the leading candidate to take over the Packers' right tackle position, left open by the departure of Tootie Robbins. The 35-year old Ilkin is 6-3 and 272 pounds.

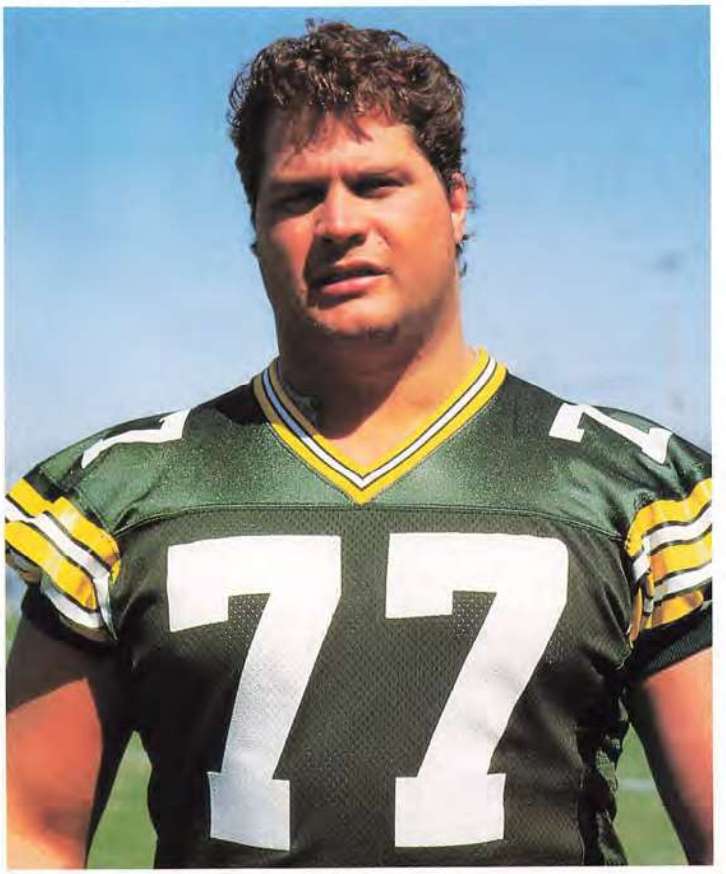
He Was No 1: Nose tackle Bill Maas, a former Kansas City Chief, was the first unrestricted free agent to be signed by the Packers.



"This is a tremendous place to sell when you live in a smog-ridden city where you can't get anywhere and you're tired of traffic jams."

Football League," General Manager Ron Wolf said. "But it's different than people anticipate when they come in here.

"This is a tremendous place to sell when you live in a smog-ridden city where you can't get anywhere and you're tired of all the traffic jams.

"Suddenly, you come in this little place here and it's pretty nice because you can move around and get around. You see the facilities, the stadium, what it has to offer, it's a huge selling point."

Not only did the Packers sell Ilkin and Prior, they also sold defensive end Reggie White from Philadelphia, unanimously acclaimed as the top free agent available, nose tackle Bill Maas from Kansas City and guard Harry Galbreath from Miami.

Perhaps no other team in the NFL improved itself as much in free agency as the Packers. Coach Mike Holmgren said his team addressed its needs "as well as any team in football this off-season."

All five free agents could wind up as starters.

Wolf emphasized two areas in particular, the defensive and offensive line.

White and Maas will dramatically upgrade the talent level in the defensive lines.

"With White and Maas we've got two solid, dependable people in the defensive line that have Pro Bowl experience, both first-round draft choices and have played in very important games," Wolf said. "We needed that."

Maas, 31, the first free agent signed by the Packers, views his move as a rebirth of sorts for his career.

Once a Pro Bowl nose tackle with the Chiefs in 1986 and '87, Maas was moved to right defensive end in 1990 and was relegated to a backup position last year.

He signed with the Packers because of the opportunity to switch back to his more natural nose tackle position and to play in an aggressive, attacking defense that better fits his style.

"I sacrificed for the Chiefs' success, playing a different position, playing a different style," Maas said. "It was hard, but I did it. The team was successful. But things kept spiraling downward from there. It was just time to go."

Galbreath, 28, a starter for five seasons at right guard, was having no problems with the way his career was going with the Dolphins. But along came the Packers, who regarded him as the top guard available in free agency and made him an offer that he couldn't refuse, which temporarily made him the highest-paid offensive lineman in football.

"I think (free agency) is good in the sense that you get a chance to see who really appreciates you," Galbreath said. "Lets you know that you are really wanted."

The Packers wanted Galbreath because he brings some much-needed youth to an offensive line that featured four starters older than 30 last season.

"It's a big signing for us because we have to get some youth in our offensive line," Wolf said. "We needed somebody to come in and (build) some continuity for the future."

Ilkin, who turns 36 in September, was regarded as insurance in case the Packers lost one of their offensive tackles in free agency, which happened when Tootie Robbins signed with New Orleans. In addition to getting a savvy veteran, the Packers regard Ilkin as a positive force in the locker room.

"For any young, developing football team, it's important to have leaders like Tunch around," Holmgren said. "He's also got some football left in him."

Prior, the fifth free-agent signing, was the Packers' first choice to replace Cecil.

"Prior gives us tremendous range in our secondary," Wolf said. "He is certainly not the hitter of Chuck Cecil, but I believe he'll end up being a better tackler in the long run and probably intercept more passes."

Like the other free agents, Prior was feeling rejuvenated by the move.

"It's a new challenge," he said. "I think it's fun. I think it sparks your interest to get back in the game. You've got to prepare yourself like you're starting out in this business. You can't be sitting back thinking you know it all because you don't."

Although they may have come to the Packers for different reasons, all of the free agents were impressed by the same things, foremost among them a coaching staff that took a 4-12 team and turned it into a 9-7 winner in just one season.

Forget about Green Bay's cold-weather image. This has become a hot place to be around the league.

"Am I the luckiest guy in the world or what?" Maas said. "I came to Green Bay and they're obviously a team that has moved the most in this free-agency deal. Then they went out and signed Reggie White, who the whole NFL was after.

"It's a big commitment from the organization to the players, saying, 'We want to win.' I think a lot of the guys here are going to answer the bell come September 1."

Mark Clayton, pulling in a practice field pass, is the front runner in the competition for the split end position opposite Sterling Sharpe. Clayton, a 5-time Pro Bowler with Miami, signed as unrestricted free agent.

Ex-Dolphin, Harry Galbreath, testing his agility during a mini-camp practice, has been designated as the Packers' starting right guard after signing as an unrestricted free agent.

WOLF DESERVED TO BE "EXECUTIVE OF THE YEAR"

by Chris Havel
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Ron Wolf's career as a National Football League talent scout is built upon thoroughness, attention to detail and leaving nothing to chance. The best surprise, to Wolf's analytical way of thinking, is no surprise.

Naturally, the Green Bay Packers' general manager was more than a little curious that March afternoon when he returned from lunch to find a memo bearing an unfamiliar name and telephone number.

A John Rawlings from St. Louis.

Wolf tried to conjure it up with his photographic memory. He drew a blank.

So he dialed away with nary a clue he was only a long distance call from joining the ranks of NFL legends Tex Schramm, Al Davis, Art Rooney, Jim Finks, Bobby Beathard. Men he'd come to admire in his 31 years in the league.

"Congratulations, Ron," said Rawlings, editor of The Sporting News. "Our publication has named you the NFL's Executive of the Year."

Wolf was stunned.

"There was considerable pause," recalls Rawlings, "followed by equal parts of delight and disbelief."

Says Wolf, "I was utterly flabbergasted."

Wolf's peers had the opposite reaction.

"Ron deserved it," says New York Giants General Manager George Young, a two-time NFL Executive of the Year. "He's made nothing but excellent decisions since he went to Green Bay."

Months have passed since the honor was announced. but it still causes the typically unflappable Wolf to swell with emotion, if not pride.

"I couldn't believe that something like that could occur, especially not to me," he says, clearing the lump from his throat. "Do I think I deserve it? No, I don't think I deserve it. But it's something I'll always treasure."

Wolf, sounding like an Oscar-winning actor trying to thank all the people who made it possible, begins to name names within the Packers' organization.

"You have to recognize that there are so many others," he says. "That (award) should be broken into about 86 pieces and handed out to each one."

Wolf neglects to mention he did the next best thing.

"The next day he sent out a memo to everyone in the organization, top to bottom, to let them know they had a big part in it," public relations director Lee Remmel says. "That's typical of Ron. That's the way he operates."

Indeed, the 54-year-old Wolf's modus operandi mirrors Sinatra's. When it's over, he'll be able to look himself in the eye and say, "I did it my way."

An example: Even though Bill Parcells was the popular choice to succeed Lindy Infante as Green Bay's head coach, and Wolf has a great respect for Parcells, he decided the situation called for someone else. Someone like Mike Holmgren, the hot young offensive coordinator at San Francisco.

So Wolf talked to Parcells, but met with Holmgren. It didn't take long for him to decide the energetic 49ers assistant was the right man for the job.

"About 15 minutes into the interview," says Wolf. "His personality, his demeanor, his approach to the game. All those things made my decision easy."

Holmgren rewarded those instincts by assembling a staff Wolf says "has a great sense of purpose" and coaching the 1992

Sign Of The Times: Ron Wolf's "thumbs up" gesture graphically symbolizes how things have gone for the Packers since he became executive vice president and general manager in November of 1991, as exemplified by a 9-7 record last season, Green Bay's second best in the last 20 years.

Packers to a 9-7 record that fell one win short of the team's first playoff appearance in a decade.

"That hire," says Wolf, "was the biggest thing I've done here."

New York Jets General Manager Dick Steinberg agrees.

"Starting with the coach, which was an excellent choice, Ron's done a tremendous job of setting up almost an entirely new organization."

Seattle General Manager Mike Allman says it was crucial Wolf got his man.

"It's vital the coach and GM are on the same page. This business is hard enough when everyone is pulling in the same direction."

Wolf's boldest move, however, came a month later when he traded a 1992 first-round draft pick for Brett Favre, Atlanta's third-string quarterback. The transaction drew sneers from Packers fans who'd never heard of Favre.

"I'm not sure they ever heard of Brett Favre until a couple of days before it happened," says Wolf's wife, Edie. "And then only in a tone of voice that wouldn't have alerted me that this was something big going to happen."

Edie relishes her husband's low-key approach.

"Oh, after it was done," she says with a smile, "you could tell he was pleased."

Wolf began talking to the Falcons about Favre his first day on the job.

"The feeling was in order for us to go anywhere we had to address that situation and get what we felt was a franchise-type player at that position," he says. "Both Mike and I felt Brett was that player."

Philadelphia director of player personnel Joe Woolley says the Packers' GM wasn't the lone wolf in his high opinion of Favre.

"When Atlanta drafted Favre, there was no question he was going to be a player...Why they got rid of him, I'll never know."

"A lot of people liked the guy," says Woolley. "But not many people had the guts to give him the job. Ron Wolf had the guts. In my opinion, that's the best move he's made there."

Steinberg: "The quarterback's the main man. That was very, very key."

Favre rewarded Wolf's faith by applying himself to his profession like he never had before. The result: Favre became only the second quarterback in Packers history to complete 300 passes in a season (302 of 471) and at 23 became the youngest Pro Bowl quarterback since Miami's Dan Marino.

Historic Day: It was smiles all-around when superstar Reggie White agreed to a four-year Packer contract on April 8, 1993, sealing one of the most significant signings in the team's long and distinguished history. White, center, is flanked by head coach Mike Holmgren, left and general manager Ron Wolf.

"When Atlanta drafted Favre, there was no question he was going to be a player," Detroit personnel director Ron Hughes says. "Why they got rid of him, I'll never know. I think the Atlanta Falcons made a great mistake."

Despite sterling performances by Holmgren and Favre, Wolf forged ahead.

While some teams were dipping their toes in the free-agent talent pool to test the waters, Wolf dived in headfirst.

The Packers' GM signed Bill Maas, a two-time Pro Bowl nose tackle from Kansas City. Then he re-signed Roland Mitchell, a clever defensive back, and Miami's talented guard, Harry Galbreath. Those were only the prelude to the big score: Landing Reggie White, America's Most Wanted free agent.

Later he landed wideout Mark Clayton, a 5-time Pro Bowler with the Miami Dolphins.

Wolf takes only the smallest credit for acquiring White, the perennial Pro Bowl defensive end. He points to Holmgren, defensive coordinator Ray Rhodes and Favre, all of whom White singled out upon his arrival.

But without Wolf, it's difficult to say there'd have been a Holmgren, Rhodes or Favre in Green Bay for White to single out.

Woolley, whose Eagles lost White, has no hard feelings for Wolf and Chief Financial Officer Mike Reinfeldt, who was instrumental in acquiring White.

"They got out and did what they needed to do, it's certainly not anything personal. Ron had the resources to get it done. I wish him and Reggie White only the best this season."

Woolley paused, remembering the Packers-Eagles game on Sept. 13, and amended his position, "Only the best, except for one week."

The respect Wolf gets from his peers appears to have been gained by his skill as a talent scout and his work ethic. Unlike some scouts, who graduate to the position after a glamorous NFL career, Wolf came up the old-fashioned way.

He earned it by weeks spent scouring the college ranks for talent.

"Being on the road makes you or it breaks you," Los Angeles Rams director of football operations Jack Faulkner says. "Ron's been through all of that. He's also had the big-city exposure with Al Davis in L.A. and Dick Steinberg in New York, and they're helluva guys when it comes to football.

"Ron's a sound guy when it comes to football judgment. Take Brett Favre. Ron had a conviction about the guy and it's paying off."

Wolf shrugs at his beginnings as if to say, "That's just how it is.

"It's the only way I know. I feel fortunate to have had the opportunity to do this. It's something as a very young person I decided I wanted to do."

Wolf's dogged ascent in his chosen field doesn't surprise his wife.

"It doesn't matter what the situation is or the odds or the obstacles are," Edie says. "He'll just single-mindedly plod ahead."

But Edie Wolf is quick to point out it's not simply a matter of doing whatever it takes to get there.

"In Ron's single-minded pursuit of this, I've never seen him do anything that I'd consider unethical or dishonest. He'd never step on anybody else so he could get where he needed to be."

Wolf knows what it feels like on the other end. He was unceremoniously ousted from his post with expansion Tampa Bay in 1978 after only three years.

"I think he'd have been NFL Executive of the Year a long time ago if he'd have been left alone in Tampa Bay," says Woolley. "If he'd have been there longer,

"Having the benefit of hindsight, there are some things I'd have done differently."

with the same chance to do things he's had in Green Bay, it would've happened. I've always admired Ron's talents."

For all the praise, Wolf admits he's far from perfect.

He says he has to learn about the nuances of dealing with a salary cap, which he anticipates will begin by 1994. He also knows he makes personnel mistakes the same as every other general manager in the league.

"Having the benefit of hindsight, there are some things I'd have done differently," he says. "The trade for Dave McCloughan didn't work out. But we were able to get that pick back this year, so that kind of balanced out.

"So I'm still probably even."

Even? Wolf's peers and Packers fans know he's a great deal further ahead of the game than that. After a winning season and major off-season acquisitions, expectations are high in Titletown.

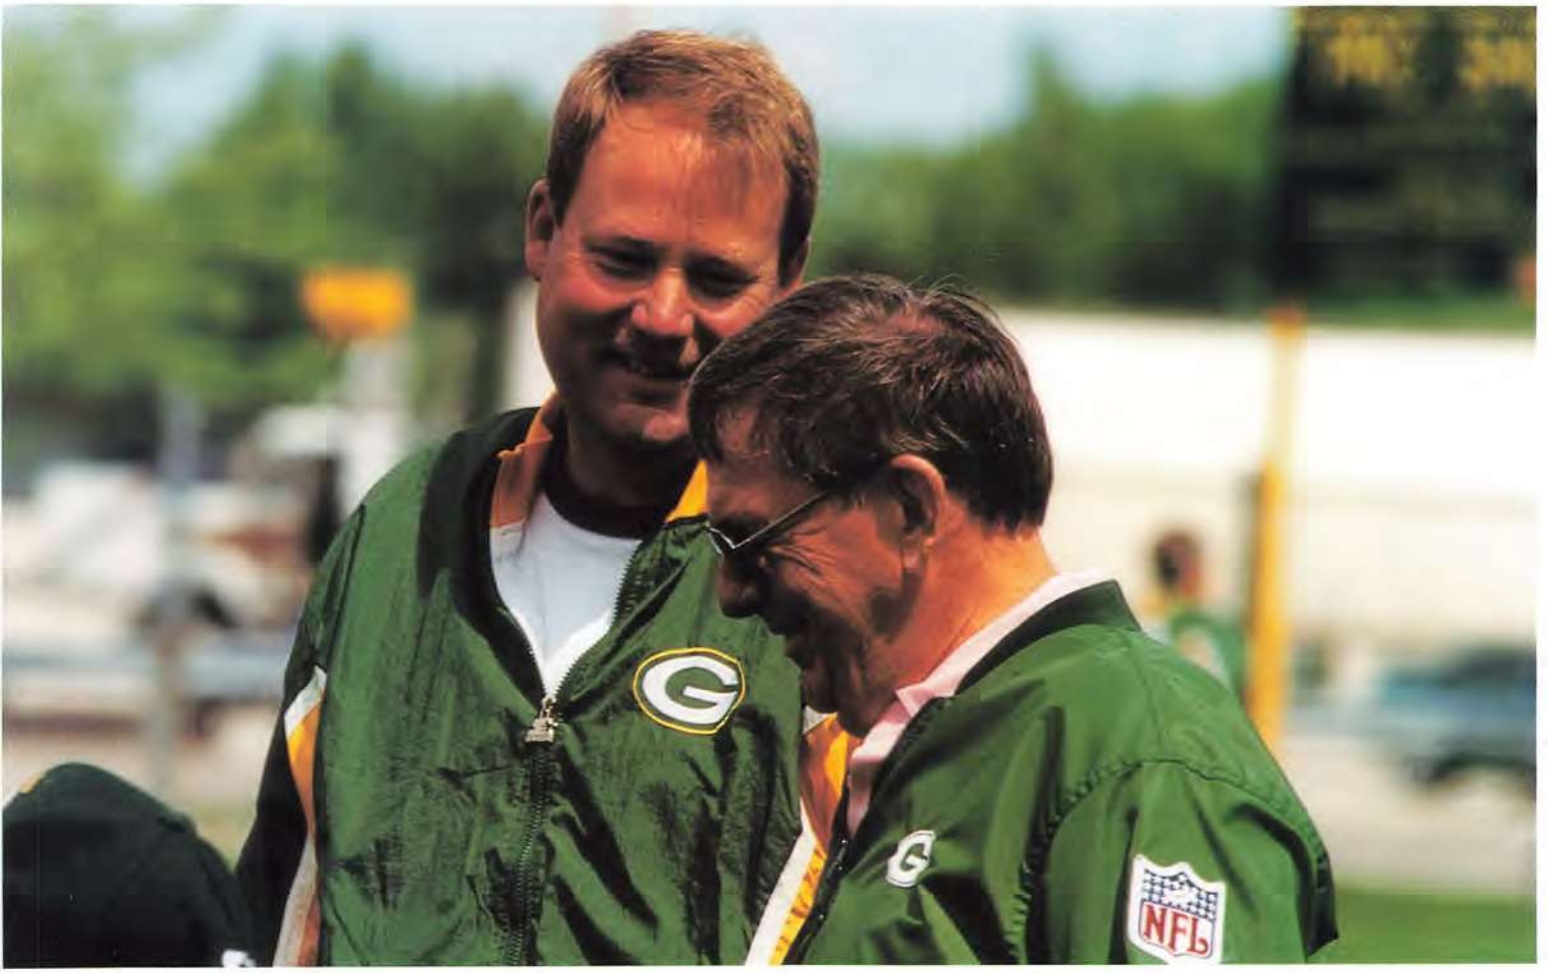
Can Ron Wolf lead the Packers back to the Super Bowl? "Absolutely," says Woolley. "Oh, you've got to have a little luck, but you've also got to make the right decisions and not be afraid to make them. You don't want players who are afraid to fail, so you can't be either. You've got to set the example."

Says Allman: "He's taken the bull by the horns. Signing Reggie White was a heckuva deal. He's decided on a course of action and he will get the players he needs to improve."

Wolf just smiles away the compliments. He's convinced winning is more than merely acquiring the best players.

"Where we've made all the improvement, it's because of our coaching staff. They were associated with winning and they understand what winning's all about. They were able to bring that attitude here and keep it here."

Funny, isn't it, how a guy with a photographic memory always seems to forget who brought Mike Holmgren and Co. to Green Bay in the first place.



Professional football is a serious business—most of the time. Here general manager Ron Wolf and head coach Mike Holmgren enjoy a light moment during a visit on the Packers' practice field.

FAMILY WOLF'S LIFEBLOOD

by Chris Havel
Green Bay Press-Gazette

A dozen black and white photos of Packers' Hall of Famers such as Curly Lambeau, Johnny "Blood" McNally and Don Hutson grace the walls of Ron Wolf's office. They represent football, Wolf's lifework.

A trio of color photos, which stand in bright contrast atop Wolf's desk, depict his personal Hall of Fame: His wife, Edie, and sons Jonathan and Eliot. They represent family, Wolf's lifeblood.

"My wife and our two sons have allowed me to live my dream at their expense," the Green Bay Packers' general manager says solemnly. "I'm deeply indebted to them. I'm not there as much as I should be."

Wolf pauses.

Images of Jonathan the fighter pilot, Eliot the NFL general manager and yes, Edie the understanding, flash vividly through his mind.

"She's a very strong woman," he says of his wife. "And the boys are going to grow up, and I probably never really will have the opportunity to know them the way a father should know his sons."

During the season, Wolf's away scouting each week. After it, he's holed up in the film room evaluating prospects. In between, he's consulting with Chief Financial Officer Mike Reinfeldt on contracts, discussing roster moves with Coach Mike Holmgren and looking at the big picture with president Bob Harlan.

"He likes to run, likes to work, loves what he's doing and spends a lot of time at it," says Edie. "There are some times he feels he should've been there for us more in the past. It really is a problem for him."

Wolf's awareness makes it a sure bet that when he isn't playing Packers he's playing catch up with his family.

"Ron and I never take vacations by ourselves," says Edie. "We always take the kids. Part of that is to compensate for the time Ron doesn't get to spend with all three of us."

On weekends during the season, Wolf makes sure the family's together. Eating out, renting movies and playing games such as Risk, Clue, Monopoly and Trivial Pursuit are highlights.

Edie laughs at the games.

"I'm laughing because we're all very intense and we all like to win," she says. "So some of our games don't always end very happily."

The Wolf Family: Ron and his wife, Edie, share a smile with their two sons, Jonathan, right, and Eliot.

Seeing Wolf interact with his boys, especially Eliot, who's his shadow throughout training camp, paints an idyllic picture. If Wolf isn't laughing or chatting with his boys, he's got an arm draped over their shoulders.

Ron Hughes, Detroit's director of player personnel, has seen it too.

"You go to the Hula Bowl, for instance, and there's Ron off over there with his family by himself," he says. "He's always taking care of the boys, his wife, making sure everything is going smooth. It's not a B.S. thing either. With Ron, you genuinely get the feeling he'd rather be with his family."

When Wolf's not there, the family has learned to adjust.

Edie, a psychologist, has established a part time practice in their home. It allows her to work 15 to 20 hours a week, but still be there for the boys.

Jonathan, 12, loves airplanes, space travel and astronauts.

Eliot, 11, is an adept athlete who dreams of running a pro football team more than he does of playing on one.

The move to Green Bay has been fairly easy for all three. They love Green Bay's small town atmosphere, its convenience, its friendly people. They love their neighborhood, which is teeming with children and safe streets for the boys to ride their bicycles on.

As with any move, however, there have been some difficult times. Like when the Packers got off to a 2-4 start in 1992.

"Nobody knows who I am...I like to be anonymous."

"Some of the other kids said fairly nasty things about Ron to the boys," says Edie. "How he didn't know what he was doing, how the Packers were just as terrible as always."

That was particularly upsetting to the boys. They'd never dealt with anything like it because their father had never held such a prominent title.

The criticism has since given way to praise.

The boys try to handle either with a polite, "Thank you. I'll be sure to pass it along to my father."

Beyond school, Edie says the family moves throughout Green Bay anonymously.

"Nobody knows who I am," she says, not at all complaining. "It's not like 'Holmgren.' When you hear 'Holmgren' there is only one. Wolf is not that uncommon a name.

"I like to be anonymous."

That nondescript state, she admits, will probably change if the Packers' fortunes continue to soar. She says she can feel the expectations for the Packers growing by the day.

"It worries me a little bit, that maybe people are expecting too much," she says. "People who know football, and I don't claim to be one, are realistic about what can be expected. But there are people who truly believe we are going to the Super Bowl, and that we'll win it.

"I hope people's expectations aren't so high that they'll be disappointed," she adds. "But I'm optimistic. From what I know about football, they've made good changes."

When it's suggested hiring her husband may have been the best, Edie just smiles as if to say, "Thank you, I'll be sure to pass it along."

HERE COMES BUCKLEY:
EXPECTING BIG THINGS THE SECOND TIME AROUND

by Tom Oates
Wisconsin State Journal

Terrell Buckley made a huge splash when he landed in the land of sky blue waters, dairy farms and quiet superstars.

Buckley—brash, outspoken and supremely confident—shattered the serenity of the state sports scene after the Packers made him their first-round pick in the 1992 NFL draft.

A record-breaking cornerback who left Florida State after his junior year, Buckley hit Wisconsin's sports fans harder than he ever hit an opposing ballcarrier. In a state where the sports heroes have been strong, silent types such as Henry Aaron, Robin Yount and Bart Starr, Buckley's bombast was as well received as rap music at a county fair.

From his boastful statements during contract negotiations to the big money deal he eventually signed to his immediate insertion into the starting lineup, Buckley generated controversy. His inevitable rookie struggles in pass coverage only exacerbated the situation, all but masking the fact that Buckley took far fewer lumps than most first-year cornerbacks in the NFL. Except for those he took from the home fans.

But while Buckley promised "a little more concentration out of myself, a little more daring attitude and a little less respect for the other guys", during his second season as the Packers' left cornerback, he issued assurances that he won't change his flamboyant style.

"I am different," Buckley said. "What I say and how I feel is probably what Robin Yount and Hank Aaron say behind closed doors. I feel like the people that won't come out publicly and say how they feel are the people that you should be afraid of.

"With me, you know where I stand. And you know where I'm coming from. I'm coming straight from the heart and I mean every word I say. I just try to be as up front and honest as possible."

Buckley's brand of honesty served to set him up for a big fall. No matter how well he played—and for the last six or seven games Buckley played quite well—he couldn't possibly perform at the level he set for himself through his words and actions. And when he didn't play to that level, Packers fans let him know about it.

That came as a shock to Buckley, who was living outside the south and away from his mother and sister for the first time. Despite the criticism, Buckley handled himself well with the fans and the media. And he never blamed anyone but himself for his troubles.

"It wasn't easy," he said, "but nothing in life comes easy. There were times in there that were hard and there were times that were not so hard. But overall I think it was probably my best all-around season, as far as off the field, on the field, dealing with the press, dealing with people.

A triumphant Terrell Buckley, escorted by happy teammates, cradles football after scoring his first NFC touchdown on a 58-yard punt return against the Cincinnati Bengals September 20th.

"I mean, I had so many changes and adjustments that I had to deal with and at the same time I had to perform. I had to be my own therapist—talking to myself—because I had the Milwaukee fans booing me, Green Bay fans booing me. That's my home crowd and I never had that before. So I learned how to deal with that...As far as handling just everything, I think that was probably one of the most important years of my life."

On the field, Buckley started slowly and finished fast. He missed training camp and the first two regular-season games before signing a contract. He played in the third game, returning a punt for a touchdown to spark an improbable come-from-behind victory over Cincinnati, and was a starting cornerback for the fifth game in Atlanta.

When he lined up against the Falcons in the Georgia Dome, Buckley had practiced only three weeks. He gave up a touchdown pass and admitted afterward that he made a mistake in coverage. A week later, the 174-pound Buckley failed to take on Cleveland's 240-pound Kevin Mack at the goal line and the Buckley-bashing began. His problems handling the ball on punt returns further angered fans.

With the fans focusing on his every move, Buckley's troubles were magnified, especially when he let a receiver get behind him.

"Everybody gets beat," he said. "What the fans don't understand is the receiver's going to have a step on you every single play...in man-to-man coverage. I think the fans just looked at the whole aspect of everything that happened before I came here and the time I was here they were just focusing on just whether (the receiver) had a step on me instead of looking at the final product: Was he scoring on me? How many times they were catching deep passes?

"Everybody's going to have a pass interference call, going to get scored on every once in awhile. It wasn't like it was happening play after play after play."

Some thought Buckley was letting receivers get deep because he was pressing for his first interception. After 30 interceptions in high school and a school-record 21 in his abbreviated career at "Cornerback U," Buckley's first NFL interception didn't come until his 11th game. However, he finished with three in his final four games, and even returned one for a touchdown against the Los Angeles Rams.

Buckley disputes the notion that he was gambling too much, looking for that first pick.

"As a matter of fact, I think I was playing a little cautious," he said. "The Lord gave me an opportunity to make a play (against Cincinnati) on the first pass that was ever thrown my way, to go out and get that first interception out of the way, and I blew it. I dropped it. About three weeks later against Cleveland it was the same thing.

"There were two opportunities there where I could have gotten that first interception out of the way and scored a touchdown also, because I had clear sailing, and I blew it. So I think the Lord said,'OK, you blew it. Now you work for it. I'm not going to help you. See how much you can take under pressure.'

"I believe when you're under pressure and things are not going the way people want them to go, that's when you find out what type of person you are. And I found out what type of person I am."

Buckley had to rediscover what type of person he was mid-way through the season. After a rough game against the New York Giants, he asked his mother to come to Green Bay. She brought along a highlight film of Buckley playing in college.

No sooner had he slipped the videotape into the VCR than Buckley noticed a difference.

"I said, 'I'm playing tentative. People are saying this and that. I'm just not Terrell. I need to just get back to the old T-Buck and just play ball and whatever happens, happens'. I took that type of attitude and the next thing you know it took off on me and I started playing pretty good."

Part of the problem, Buckley said, was that he was giving his opponents too much respect.

"I think I did at first," he said. "My last six games I didn't care who I was playing. I knew what I had to do. I knew what I could do to get interceptions and help the team win. That's how I've always been. I never worried about anybody else."

With his keen competitive instincts and phenomenal recovery speed, he never had to. But Buckley understands that hard work in the film room and the weight room are necessary in the NFL. It will help that Buckley should be able to play even more man-to-man coverage—his forte—this season now that the Packers have upgraded the speed elsewhere in their secondary.

Best of all, Buckley survived his rookie season without any loss of confidence—rare for a cornerback.

"I haven't lost a lick of confidence," he said. "As a matter of fact, I've gained a tad. I believe in proving it each and every year.

"I look at this previous year in Green Bay and I look at my 10th grade year in high school and my freshman year in college. Every year that first year I'd do something really well and the second year I'd pick it up another notch, the third year I'd pick up another notch. Every year I'd pick it up."

Packers coach Mike Holmgren noticed during a spring mini-camp that Buckley seemed more relaxed than he was last year.

"He has come in after all the hoopla last year and he's having fun," Holmgren said. "You can tell if you watch practice, with the give and take. Before all is said and done, everyone will see exactly how good he is."

Buckley's "realistic" prediction for this season is 10 to 14 interceptions. If he hits 14, it would tie the NFL record set by Dick "Night Train" Lane of the Rams in 1952.

"I'm expecting really big things," he said. "A lot more touchdowns. A lot more interceptions. Just my all-around game to be better."

If that happens, Buckley might have a chance of ending his second season where he began his first—at the Georgia Dome. Only this time, it would be in the Super Bowl.

"I think the sky is the limit (for the Packers)," Buckley said. "If everybody sets their goals the way I set mine, where we'll end up is in Atlanta at the Georgia Dome. I think this team could go that far."

Head coach Mike Holmgren takes a time out for a brief heart-to-heart visit on the sideline during Cincinnati contest, Terrell's first in a Packer uniform.

Bob Harlan, now in his fifth year as the Packers' president and chief executive officer, proudly displays the game ball presented to him by head coach Mike Holmgren following the Packers' 27-24 victory over Philadelphia last season.

BOB HARLAN
HEADS PACKERS FOR NEW HEIGHTS

Bud Lea
The Milwaukee Sentinel

At the team's annual stockholders' meeting June 5, 1989, when Bob Harlan was introduced as the new president of the Green Bay Packers, some of the old guard were apoplectic. "How dare they?" they said. "There goes tradition."

The portrait of Dominic Olejniczak would fall.

The most popular belief was Harlan still was an outsider. He grew up in Des Moines, Iowa. Packer presidents are bred in Brown County.

Harlan wasn't real. He had a sense of humor. He got along with the media, of all people. He had more of a reputation as a cut-up than a chief executive officer.

Running the Green Bay Packers has always been an organization that liked presidents tight-lipped and humorless, somber men who would screen their telephone calls. Harlan, they thought, was just a guy who would play it for laughs.

Well, Harlan has been in the driver's seat for four years now. He's shown he can make difficult decisions. He has instilled confidence in the organization. He has refined the role of running a National Football League franchise.

Bob Harlan didn't change. He just made the organization better.

It was 22 years ago when Harlan left a public relations job with the St. Louis baseball Cardinals and came to work for the Packers. He was hand-picked by Dan Devine as assistant general manager.

In 1971, the Packers entrusted the job of head coach and general manager to Devine, who had been a successful college coach and athletic director at the University of Missouri. The dual job at Green Bay had been perfect for Vince Lombardi, so the Packers' ruling executive committee figured it was the right way to continue operations—if they had the right man.

Harlan sat back and watched Devine escape the heat in Green Bay in 1974 and run off to Notre Dame. He saw the team fire Bart Starr in 1983. He saw Forrest Gregg up and leave in 1987.

He saw profits grow and losing seasons continue. He heard fans gripe that the Packers' front office wasn't all that concerned about winning as long as the corporation turned a profit.

In the spring of '89, Harlan wasn't sitting back and watching anymore. The problems were dumped on his lap. The man who had worked mostly behind the scenes with the Packers was named the ninth president in the team's long existence.

As it turned out, Harlan wasn't into problems. He was into solutions.

In his four years on the job, Harlan has already left a significant imprint. He developed a marketing department, something that had not existed in the past. He oversaw an $8.2 million building project for private boxes and club seats at Lambeau Field. He created the position of chief financial officer, taking the job of negotiating contracts away from the football side of the organization and putting it on the business side, then hired Mike Reinfeldt to fill the position.

But all of that is tame compared to what he did with five games remaining in the 1991 season. With the Packers struggling through another losing season, Harlan fired Tom Braatz, the team's executive vice president of football operations. One week later, Ron Wolf was hired and given sweeping powers of a general manager to run the football operations.

"I felt it was important that we totally change the top of this organization so one person comes in with the full authority to run the football team with absolutely no interference from anybody," Harlan said. "We made Ron Wolf that promise."

Harlan admitted that he had made a mistake by extending Lindy Infante's contract for three years after the popular coach had led the Packers to a 10-6 record in 1989. Infante had an escape clause in his Green Bay contract, allowing him to leave anytime he wanted to. And with talk of the NFL expanding to Jacksonville, there was speculation that Infante would want to return to his native Florida and the Packers would be left holding the bag.

Still, Harlan was taking a chance giving full authority to Wolf to run the team. No one person in the whacky world of professional football is a sure thing.

"I had known about Ron for a number of years," Harlan said. "I had always heard good things about him. I felt anyone who worked for Al Davis, a football fanatic, for 24 years obviously had done a very good job or he wouldn't have been employed that long. The Raiders were a successful operation. They won Super Bowls."

The Packers had not won a Super Bowl since Lombardi's last year. They had not made the playoffs in 10 years.

Now, this football organization has gotten downright acceptable. The renaissance began with Harlan.

"I'd hope everyone in the league would look at Green Bay with some respect."

"We're coming off a very strong year, financially," Harlan said. "We've always said we make our money in football and we spend our money in football.

"It doesn't do us a lot of good to pile up a big reserve. We want to take the money we make and either put it into facilities or put it into players and improve this football team."

There is a $1.6 million addition to the Packers' administration complex at Lambeau Field to make their excellent facilities even better. Next winter they will construct a new $3 million indoor practice facility that will be the showcase of all indoor facilities.

Free agency was supposed to wipe Green Bay off the professional football map. The Packers, Commissioner Paul Tagliabue testified in last year's NFL trial, "would have trouble surviving" in a world where players had some freedom of choice.

Sam Wyche said that when you think of all the NFL players from Florida and all the other ones who would live there, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers could be one of the top franchises in the NFL. Nobody would want to go to Green Bay.

You've got to be kidding. No team has thrived more than the Packers in pro football's confusing new big-spending world.

The Packers landed the biggest free agent of them all, Reggie White, by giving the former Philadelphia Eagles defensive star $17 million over the next four years. That wasn't all. They laid out the bucks to build an offensive line with Harry Galbreath and Tunch Ilkin, and they signed defensive end Bill Maas, a great run stuffer, and safety Mike Prior.

"I'd hope everyone in the league would look at Green Bay with some respect," Harlan said. "It bothers me a great deal to think anybody looks down on Green Bay.

Longtime friend and golfing partner Jerry Mortell, an official NFL timekeeper for Packer games in Green Bay and Milwaukee, critiques Bob Harlan's putting during a customary Thursday afternoon game at Green Bay's Oneida Golf and Riding Club.

The little city. This is too proud a franchise to be looked at like that

"I'd hope that people say, 'Green Bay has some very capable people in that football operation. They're spending some money. They want to win. They're doing whatever it takes to build a winner.'

"We'll be under the (salary) cap next year like everybody else. But that won't stop this staff from doing everything to he successful."

The Packers reported a record profit of nearly $5 million at the club's annual stockholders meeting in May. A good part of that came from shared television revenue that went from $28 million to $34 million.

The free agent spending spree will show in next year's annual financial report. Without revenue sharing and a salary cap, this franchise in the smallest city in the NFL would be in trouble.

"We probably won't have a great financial year as we look at it right now," Harlan said. "But if we're building the football team and we're at least breaking even, that's fine. Once the cap kicks in and there is a system where the players and owners work together, we can remain a strong franchise."

A lot of things can change a team. Injuries can have dramatic results. Harlan worries about those things.

Harlan said he wants to see the Packers get to the point where what happened in 1992 isn't a one-year thing. Above all, he knows the city of Green Bay and the state of Wisconsin deserve it.

"The team learned last year what it means to win," he said. "The feeling of success is good.

"Players told me things I never heard before. Ken Ruettgers told me late in the season how terrific our game plans were. The players enjoyed it. I never used to hear those things.

"I'd just like to see the team continue to improve, and become consistent winners so we're always in the playoff hunt. We've had an awful lot of seasons that when we go into December, the big question is what we're going to get in the next draft. With the people we've got in charge of this team, I have no doubt those days are in the past."

There's traditionally an ego image among NFL owners. It's a fraternity that Harlan doesn't fit.

"You can say our owners are the 1,866 stockholders scattered around the world," he said of this community-owned, non-profit corporation. "So, it's a different fraternity for me. But that's fine.

"My only concern is that we're successful. It's my job to put people in place and make sure we are successful. I believe we have the proper people here."

The 1993 Green Bay Packers are not the 1962 Packers. But if they get into the playoffs, look for football to comb the country for CEOs with smiles on their faces and the know-how to get things done—men like Bob Harlan.

TWO LIKELY STARTERS TOP PACKER DRAFT

Ron Wolf, the man who has turned around the Packers' football operation in record time, takes a highly pragmatic approach to the National Football League's key personnel pool, the annual draft.

In his modus operandi, the emphasis is on quality rather than quantity. "If you get two good picks each year who give you a few good seasons," he offers in explanation, "that's doing okay."

The jury, necessarily, is still out on this year's class, but the overriding impression is that he and his coaches/scouts might have done substantially better than that in the NFL's 1993 selection meeting.

In a draft in which Wolf and Head Coach Mike Holmgren accented defense, the Packers appear to have harvested two likely starters in linebacker Wayne Simmons of Clemson and defensive back George Teague of Alabama, their two first round choices.

In addition, they upgraded an already strong quarterback position with the selection of Washington's Mark Brunell, a former Rose Bowl Most Valuable Player, in the fifth round, a quality athlete Wolf never dreamed would be available to the Packers at that point in the draft.

The Green and Gold's executive vice president/general manager also wangled some depth for an aging offensive line by picking a pair of huge and highly talented young tackles, 6-3 and 318-pound Earl Dotson of Texas A. & I. in the third round and 6-4, 347-pound Paul Hutchins of Western Michigan in the sixth round.

Addressing the selections of Simmons and Teague, Wolf asserted, "I think we really strengthened ourselves dramatically. Now if we're fortunate enough to receive (Johnny) Holland or (Mark) D'Onofrio back from injuries, we've got a strong defense."

Wolf also expressed satisfaction over acquiring the player he never expected to draft, the left-handed Brunell, whom he tapped with the sixth pick in the fifth round—one acquired from Tampa Bay in compensation for the free agent signing of running back Vince Workman by the Buccaneers.

Quick to point out that selection of a quarterback had not even been a consideration going into the draft, with starter Brett Favre, veteran Ken O'Brien and former Heisman Trophy winner Ty Detmer in hand, Wolf explained, "That was a pick we made because of the quality of the player that was available at the time of the selection.

"It certainly wasn't done with any particular need in mind or anything like that. He is a fine player who shouldn't have been there, and that's the reason we took him. To have a player of that caliber available when you pick where we were selecting, it just seemed idiotic not to select him. That's what this game is all about...competition. If we can get better at the most critical position in the game, then we should do so."

Brunell, characterized as reminiscent of Steve Young because of his running skill as well as his left throwing arm, passed for more than 4,000 yards and 28 touchdowns during his collegiate career in the highly regarded Pac-10 Conference.

"There is a very good chance of keeping four quarterbacks."

The ever candid Wolf added credibility to Brunell's prospects for full season employment when a question surfaced concerning that subject during a draft day news conference. Obviously surprising the media with his prompt and unequivocal reply, he said, "There is a very good chance of keeping four quarterbacks."

Wolf also waxed optimistic about the Packers' other '93 selections in their defense-oriented draft, which saw them tap six of nine players for the defensive side of the ball: Inside linebacker James Willis of Auburn (6-1-1/2 and 230), strong safety Doug Evans of Louisiana Tech (6-3 and 186), defensive back Tim Watson of Howard University (6-2 and 215) and defensive tackle Robert Kuberski of Navy (6-4 and 281).

On the subject of the top choice, Simmons, Ron described the wide-ranging South Carolinian as "nasty," adding, "he has a tremendous knack for getting around the corner, a little burst and surge. I don't think he makes eye-catching plays, but he's a very steady performer."

A second team All-America selection at linebacker, Simmons registered 57 tackles as a senior, with 6-1/2 quarterback sacks and 11 tackles for losses. What may be as significant as his senior statistics, Simmons also has success in the classroom, having completed a financial management degree in August of 1992.

As the Packers moved into 1993's training camp, the 6-foot, 1-1/2 Simmons, possessor of impressive 4.65 speed in the '40,' was looked upon as a potential starter at left outside linebacker, freeing incumbent LOLB George Koonce to move inside.

"We anticipate he could start," Wolf observed. "If that is the case, we no longer have to walk around with our fingers crossed, hoping somebody will pass their physical or we won't lose someone in free agency."

Delighted that Simmons was there when the Packers' turn to make the 15th pick came, Wolf said, "The waiting, sitting there watching all these players go, you're convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt that the player you really covet isn't going to make it to you."

Wayne's mother, Dorothy Simmons, also was pleased, having prayed that her son would be drafted by the Packers. She said she dreamed of him playing alongside Reggie White, whom she hopes will become a role model for her son.

Her eagerness stems from her son's involvement in three fights during five years at Clemson. "Reggie White's an ordained minister," she noted. "He would be perfect for Wayne."

The 6-foot-2, 185-pound Teague, who had 14 career interceptions for Alabama's Crimson Tide (tied for fourth all-time in school history), initially was slated to work at right cornerback behind veteran Roland Mitchell and Corey Harris, but eventually is projected as the starting free safety.

Possessor of 4.49 speed in the '40,' Teague was a second team All-America selection following the '92 season, recording 42 tackles (34 solos). He also registered six interceptions and seven pass breakups, caused two fumbles, recovered another and blocked a punt.

Teague became a Packer because of Wolf's well documented ability to "pull the trigger" on draft day...

The 22-year-old Montgomery, AL, native, originally looked upon as a middle round selection, claimed the national spotlight in dramatic fashion in Alabama's appearance against Miami in the Sugar Bowl New Year's Day. He caught speedy receiver Lamar Thomas from behind and stripped him of the football in the Crimson's Tide victory that clinched the national championship for Alabama.

Teague became a Packer because of Wolf's well documented ability to "pull the trigger" on draft day, which saw the latter engineer no fewer than four transactions involving 13 choices overall. He completed a 4-for-2 exchange with the Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys to move up and acquire their first round pick, the 29th, in order to secure the talented Alabama defender.

Addressing the other side of the football, Wolf acknowledged he was more or less looking beyond 1993 in the selection of the massive young offensive tackles he selected.

"We think that, with Dotson and Hutchins, we've got two young giant offensive linemen that—if we do this properly and train them properly—they can be the cornerstones of our future," he said. "And we're just hoping that that is what is going to occur. By that I mean as our backup offensive linemen.

"In this draft, Earl Dotson didn't have to take a back seat to anybody as far as run-blocking is concerned. That's his strength. It'll be up to us, to (offensive line coach) Tom Lovat, to develop the other aspect.

"Paul Hutchins...is a huge young man with an enormous amount of talent. There's an obvious reason why he is a later draft pick—why he was there for us. We feel very comfortable that he's seen the light and will move on..He's 347 now but he should be 330."

In the case of Willis, who came out after his junior season and is only 20-years old, Wolf said, "What caught our eye was his ability to run to the football. Plus he's a mere child (Willis will not turn 21 until September).He's a big, physical, no-nonsense kind of player. His physique is very, very similar to Johnny Holland's. The sky's the limit here.

"With Evans, he possesses such great speed and he is such a good hitter—he's not a very large person...he's 6-foot-a-half-inch and 190—but we're going to try to take advantage of his athletic ability and put him outside. If he can't do that, he certainly can go and play the strong safety position because he would be about as big as LeRoy Butler is from a weight standpoint. And he hits well enough and tackles well enough to be able to handle that. But, hopefully, we can train him and develop him into being a corner.

"Evans is an extremely tough young man. Not only is he a good secondary player, he is a heck of a 'dog' man from his safety position, and that's a unique skill. But, again, his—as with the two linemen—is going to be a teaching situation on the part of our coaching staff. We're going to try to take advantage of his athletic ability and put him in a different position."

Taking note of the other defensive back the Packers selected, Wolf noted, "Tim Watson is a strong safety from Howard who is probably the best—this is probably a very strong statement—probably is the best tackler in this year's draft. Watson is a unique case. He is just a tremendous tackler. And it's something we needed to add to our football team—another tough guy back in there. And he's a tough man...a tough man."

Kuberski, the Packers' ninth and final selection, is in an unusual category—he has a military commitment.

"It remains to be seen what's going to happen there," Wolf said. "He's working towards getting out and, if he's successful, we look at that as a bonus. If he's not successful, we look at it as a future pick. He's a fine football player who's going to get even larger. And once he can devote his full attention to the game of football, he'll become an even better player."

Given that quality was his primary objective going into the draft, rather than quantity, Wolf's 'bottom line' appraisal was all the more intriguing.

How many of the nine draftees, he was asked, did he expect to make the Packers' final, '93 roster?

"I don't expect Kuberski (to) because I don't expect him to be here," came the reply, with typical promptitude. "(But) I expect all (of the other) eight to make our team."

Such a prospect obviously has been enhanced by expansion of the regular season roster limit from 47 to 53 players. But the "forecast" also speaks eloquently about the presumed quality of the team's 1993 draft, executed under the direction of the man who has earned new and league-wide respect for Green Bay's franchise and football operation with impressive dispatch.

'THE BUTLER'

by Tim Froberg

The football was laying loose on the ground and LeRoy Butler saw nothing but end zone ahead of him as he scooped up the ball and prepared to race upfield for any easy six.

He took a few steps and tripped over his own two feet.

Laughter filled the sandlot field, but young LeRoy, awkward and just learning to play a game he would later make his profession, didn't see the humor. His feet had gotten in the way of his dreams since infancy; the bones once being so brittle they had impaired his ability to walk and even required braces. The taunting, while good-natured, hurt.

Now, a nimble-footed roadrunner of a defensive back patrolling the NFL's speed zone, Butler can sit back and chuckle about his humble beginnings as a football player.

"You know, I still think back about picking up that fumble and going all the way," Butler said with a characteristic grin. "I was pretty awful back then. I look back on those times now and kind of smile."

Butler's feet haven't failed him since, but with continued progress he may be headed for another trip: this one to Honolulu, site of the Pro Bowl. The upbeat and amicable strong safety is looking to make the jump into the elite status of defensive backs after three rock-solid seasons in Green Bay.

"This year is going to be my year to prove to everyone that I'm an All-Pro player," Butler said. "I'm not sure that people around the league really respect LeRoy Butler as a player. I think they respect me as a person."

As a person, few players have done more with their lives to command respect than Butler, who has scaled a mountain of adversity to reach great heights never expected of him. The first 24 years of his life have run like a movie, portraying the strength of the human spirit.

Like millions of others, he dreamed of stardom in professional sports as a youth, but his chances seemed so remote. His athletic activity as a child was severely restricted by a foot disorder. The bones in his feet were extremely weak and their growth stunted, creating a misalignment that allowed him to walk only short distances and prevented him from running. For a good chunk of his childhood, Butler's feet were either in braces or casts. There were even awful periods when he was bound to a wheel chair.

Butler felt little physical pain, but the emotional anguish was difficult to deal with. While his friends played Little League baseball and Pop Warner football, all LeRoy could do was sit, watch, wish and wait for the day that he, too, could break into a sprint or hurl his body recklessly into the air.

"At one point, I thought I had cerebral palsy," said Butler, who has a nephew afflicted with the crippling disease. "It was really hard for me. Other kids had helmets and shoulder pads and trophies and I didn't have any of that. I couldn't even play kickball on the playground.

"The bones in my feet were so weak they couldn't handle all that running and jumping. I remember breaking them once from just coming down the stairs in the house. I was always put behind in my dreams and I just thank the Lord that he gave me the strength and motivation to accomplish this. There were a lot of other little kids that were with me in the hospital that just gave up.

"Once I got healthy, I think it made me work harder. After a hard day, my feet still hurt a little, but it's no big deal."

By the time Butler hit the seventh grade, his feet had healed and he was able to concentrate on accomplishing feats of athletic skill. While there were clumsy initial moments such as the aborted run with the fumble, LeRoy eventually made up for lost time on the football field, landing prep All-American honors as a senior at Lee High School in Jacksonville (Fl) where he was a teammate of current Packer fullback Edgar Bennett.

Butler, a running back and defensive back, saved some of his best moves to elude trouble that lurked on virtually every corner of a crime-infested Jacksonville housing project where LeRoy, the second youngest of four children, lived with his mother, Eunice a single parent. LeRoy credits Eunice and an uncle, Charles Durham, with keeping him out of hot water and away from the bullets that often sprayed the mean streets of the city. Eunice was divorced from LeRoy's father when he was three, but Durham was always there for LeRoy and he still refers to Durham as his "father figure."

"My mom wouldn't let me hang out on the streets and my uncle gave me a lot of good advice and he'd get all upset if I even talked about quitting sports," LeRoy said. "I knew that a wild street life would be counter-productive to playing sports. Plus, I didn't have time for that stuff. When I got home from practice, my mom wouldn't let me eat until I did my homework. Sometimes, I'd go across the street to a park to meet my girlfriend, but when shooting broke out, I was out of there. A lot of my friends got hurt. Some were killed."

The neighborhood was so dangerous that Butler sometimes met collegiate recruiters at a near-by gas station and personally escorted them to his apartment for their own safety.

"I remember when Bobby Bowden (Florida State's coach) came to recruit me," Butler recalled. "It was a real bad day, with a lot of shooting and killing. I was worried for his safety because I figured in our neighborhood if someone saw 'white guys driving around in a nice car' they'd try and rob and hurt them. If he was worried, he didn't show it. I think he was more worried about getting LeRoy Butler to play at Florida State than those guys hanging out on the street corner."

Growing up in an impoverished environment, with a physical handicap and with his father not always around, the always-optimistic Butler developed a code that he still follows today: No matter what the problem, it can always be worse.

"It really can," he said. "I've faced so much adversity that nothing really phases me anymore. Nothing. I've always had a strong hold on life."

More adversity greeted Butler his freshman year at Florida State as he failed to meet the minimum ACT test standards and was forced to sit out the season as a Proposition 48 casualty. Predictably, Butler bounced back and became a solid student and a three-year starter for the Seminoles, playing his first two seasons at free safety before being switched to corner his senior year. Playing for Bowden—a football legend in the citrus state—was like a dream come true for Butler.

Said Butler, "I used to run home early from church every Sunday and watch three shows: the NFL Today, Tarzan and the Bobby Bowden Show. Bobby was like a national hero in Florida and one of the greatest moments of my life was to hear him say on his TV show, 'And that's LeRoy Butler from Jacksonville, Florida on the interception.' One of the biggest things for me, though, was just to go to college. No one in our family ever had that opportunity and I knew I'd have to be a pretty good football player because we didn't have the money to send me to college."

One in a long line of outstanding Seminole defensive backs (including teammate Terrell Buckley and close friend, Deion Sanders), Butler was Green Bay's second-round pick in the 1990 NFL draft after landing first-team All-American honors in '89. Drafted as a cornerback and rated by many personnel experts as the most instinctive corner available, Butler moved into the starting lineup in his second NFL season following a year of nickel back duty. A ballhawk and fearless hitter, he quickly established himself as one of the league's better young corners, sharing the team lead in interceptions (three) for the second straight year.

But just when Butler seemed to find himself in a comfort zone, he was thrust into unfamiliar territory. The Packers snapped up Buckley with the fifth pick in the '92 draft and asked Butler if he would move to strong safety. The shift was designed to inject more speed and athleticism into what had been a slow-footed secondary. Butler graciously accepted the challenge and adapted well to the new position, which involved more hitting and less finesse play. The fact that Buckley was a good friend of his and a tremendous athlete made his decision easy. Besides, compared to some of the obstacles he had overcome earlier in life, switching positions was no major ordeal.

"I felt that for us to be a good team, I had to make a smooth transition there," said Butler. "The nice thing was that they asked me about if I would switch before drafting Terrell, rather than just telling me to do it. I've been moved around all my life and I'm not really sure this will be my position the rest of my career. It's kind of fun though. I feel like I'm versatile enough where I can play either corner or safety and this makes me more valuable than a one-dimensional guy."

Butler gave himself a passing grade for his first year at strong safety, but admits that it took almost half a season to properly adjust to the new position. Butler was second among Packers in passes defensed (14) and fourth in team tackles (74), while intercepting one pass.

"It was until about the seventh or eighth game that I really felt comfortable," he said. "You have to play almost like a linebacker at times. Now, I'm really comfortable with the scheme and know the coverages so well that I can take more chances and be a little more reckless, instead of sitting back being cautious. I'm definitely looking forward to making more big plays this year."

The position wasn't completely foreign to Butler,since he had played free safety at Florida State. Yet, he is quick to point out the vast differences between the two safety spots.

"Strong safety is definitely a tougher position to play," Butler said. "You have more responsibilities than free safety where you just sit back in the post, react and catch overthrown balls. At strong safety, you've got to handle the tight end, the big fullback and the big bodies coming around the corner and you've got to go through two or three guys sometimes to make the tackle. At free safety, you get bigger hits because you can get to people when they're not looking. At strong safety, they're looking right at you. It's the difference between getting a good hit and a tackle. At strong safety, you get more tackles than big hits."

Butler managed to get in a few sonic blasts and also proved to be a big hit with Buckley and some of the team's younger players, emerging as a team leader.

"I feel like I'm one of the main sources of the nucleus here and I think I helped make Terrell's transition smoother," Butler said. "When he went through tough times, I kind of took him under my wing. He always came to me when he had a question about something. Now, he feels more comfortable and relaxed. He's a fun, joking kind of person, but he feels that if someone's pointing the finger at him, he's got to do something great like an interception or returning a punt for a touchdown to make them point the finger at themselves.

"We talk all the time about Green Bay having the top secondary in the league and going to the Pro Bowl. I think those are goals we can reach."

Butler is one of three Seminoles on the Green Bay roster and finds himself as somewhat of a good-will ambassador for the Packers. His presence was a big reason that former teammates Buckley and Bennett were eager to come to Green Bay.

"I tell them all that this is not a big city, not a real wild place, but it's a pleasure to play here," Butler said. "The players get really close here and you don't see many guys stray away. The games are always sold out and you can see how much the people really love their football here. It's a great place to play."

When his playing days are over, Butler is considering a career as a social worker. He is close to obtaining a degree in social science at FSU and works during the off-season as a counselor with the "Underprivileged Kids of Jacksonville" organization.

"I've got a group of kids, there's about 112 of them, I work with that we call the "Butler Buddies," he said. "We go on field trips and have basketball tournaments and things like that. They bring me their report cards every quarter so I can check up on them. They're big Packer fans now and have all the football cards. They were all sobbing last year when we lost to Minnesota and were telling me what the team needed.

"It's fun because those kids need direction. I do my best to give them that direction because there's a lot of bad things out there. I want to help kids, but I want them to be able to help themselves. If they say they want to be a doctor, I tell them a doctor doesn't hang out on the street corner. A doctor does his homework and whatever else he can to be successful."

Butler does his homework, too. He is praised by secondary coach Dick Jauron for his intelligence and strong work ethic: key factors along with a zest for contact which enables him to make a smooth transition to strong safety. Confident but not arrogant, Butler sees big things on the horizon for himself and his team.

"I think it's realistic to say we can go 11-5," he said. "I know that sounds real bold, but I really believe it. We're having fun now and there's no pressure like there was when I was a rookie here. The coaches have confidence in us now and are going to let us loose a little more this year. We're going to build on what we did last year and we're going to be a real cocky team. At the end of last year, we thought we were unbeatable. We were running on premium, but we just ran out of gas. Now, we're getting full again."

If the Packers are able to break into the playoffs following a lengthy absence, no one will be happier than Butler. If not, Butler will calmly accept it. He knows it could always be worse.

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

by Art Daley
Editor Emeritus

The Packers are celebrating their 75th year in professional football this season.

It's a Diamond Jubilee and this is a tale about their unique history. Let's start right at the start:

Somewhere in the middle of the first decade in this century a boy with a big shock of curly black hair fashioned a football out of a salt sack filled with leaves, pebbles and sand.

His name was Earl Louis Lambeau and he lived at 1205 Cherry Street in Green Bay, Wisconsin. Earl and his grammar school friends threw that football around on dusty St. Clair Street. Remember: He threw the football.

Earl organized a group that whipped the East High freshmen team 18 to 0 and the East coaches couldn't wait for Lambeau and his buddies to get to high school. Earl Lambeau became a big star at East, not to mention a name change from Earl to Curly, and in one of his most memorable games he scored the only touchdown as East beat hated West 7 to 0.

Young Lambeau loved to throw the football and the big noise at the time was how Knute Rockne's Notre Dame team used the forward pass to beat heavily favored Army. Thus, Curly wanted to try his passing at Notre Dame.

It never happened because Rockne installed Lambeau at fullback alongside the fabled George Gipp. Curly was one of only 13 players to receive a Notre Dame letter.

When Curly returned home for the Christmas recess he came up with a sore throat and a tonsillectomy laid him low for six weeks. Though he was a good student and he was assured of playing football, Curly decided he wanted to go to work. He found a job paying a handsome $250 a month at the Indian Packing Company.

As autumn approached that year, young Lambeau got the football bug and, fortunately, he was a friend of George W. Calhoun, sports editor of the Green Bay Press-Gazette. Cal said, "Why not get up a team in Green Bay. I'll help you put one together and give you all the publicity you need."

The first meeting was held in the newsroom of the Press-Gazette on August 14, 1919 and 25 players attended. The first practice was set for September 3 and the first game was September 14 against Menominee North End A.C. Curly's men won it 53-0. The Packers finished with a 10-1 record that year and piled up 565 points and allowed only 12. They played as a town team in 1920 and posted 9-1-1.

The young Packers got a membership in the American Professional Football Association, which became the National Football League a year later, and played their first league game against the Minneapolis Marines in Green Bay October 23, 1921.

The townspeople were excited and a crowd estimated at 3,000 watched the first "for real" game. The Marines, six-year Midwest champions, held a 6-0 lead until the waning minutes of the game when the Packers recovered a fumble on the Marine 35. Lambeau threw a 22-yard pass to Buff Wagner and three plays later Art Schmael scored from four yards out. Lambeau drop-kicked the extra point for a memorable 7-6 victory.

That was Game 1 and convinced Lambeau, his players and the fans that Green Bay could compete with the Big Boys (cities).

History proved they could and did. League Game No. 936 was played last December 27 against the Minnesota Vikings in Minneapolis, a 27-7 loss, but an important lesson for Coach Mike Holmgren's crew as it gets ready for Season 75.

When you skim over the Packers' past, the whole thing seems more and more improbable and downright flabbergasting. How did they do it?

How could this team from this dinky little town win 11 championships, including the first two Super Bowls, more than any other team in the league. Grantland Rice, the noted sports writer, called them the Sports Wonder of the World. To be sure!

20's

Johnny "Blood" McNally, known as the "Vagabond Halfback," was one of the most colorful—and talented—players on the Packers' first triple champions (1929-30-31). He, like his teammates Don Hutson and Cal Hubbard, is a charter member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

There were road blocks and problems along the way—especially the first 40 years, but the tenacity of the people involved always came to the rescue. There were two groups of heroes:

No. 1 were the teams, which is to say Lambeau, and No. 2 were Green Bay's businessmen.

Lambeau was a holler guy, an incurable optimist and a great salesman. He learned football along the way and his coaching plays were in loose-leaf notebooks in a black brief-case. He got the players and then worked them into a frenzy for the games.

The business folks? No. 1 had to be A.B. Turnbull, publisher of the Press-Gazette. Lambeau and Calhoun were faced with a $2,000 loss one Sunday when a day-long downpour threatened to kill the crowd at a game. They were in the Press-Gazette offices on this Sunday morning when Turnbull walked in, heard their plight and told them to play the game anyway. Turnbull incorporated the football operation and got enough money from his business pals to keep the Packers afloat.

These merchants also: Built old City Stadium in 1925, came to the rescue with money in 1933, sold stock in a major $150,000 life-saver under Jerry Atkinson in 1949, and then built a steel concrete stadium seating 32,150 in 1957. That stadium now seats a few under 60,000 and has luxury boxes and theater type seats.

A pivotal year for the Packers was 1933 when Green Bay and the Portsmouth, OH, Spartans were the only town teams left. The Packer management decided to play one game in Milwaukee in hopes of gaining downstate attention and attendance. Some games have been played in Milwaukee since. Portsmouth was moved to Detroit in 1934 and renamed the Lions, leaving Green Bay as the only "town" team left in the NFL.

Don Hutson, captured in a "classic" pose, is a charter member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, having intimidated NFL defenses with his pass receiving exploits during his 11-year Packer career.

30's

Tony Canadeo, the "Gray Ghost of Gonzaga," was the Packers' first 1,000-yard rusher (1,052 yards in 208 attempts in 1949) and only the third in NFL history. He was enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1974.

40's

Quarterback Tobin Rote (1950-56) gained collegiate fame as a passer at Rice Institute but became a highly productive runner after joining the Packers—so productive he emerged as their leading rusher in three different seasons (1951, 52 and 56).

50's

While the businessmen worked quietly in the background, Lambeau kept the team winning. His forces won three straight NFL championships in 1929-31 and then titles in 1936, 1939 and 1944. A passing disciple, Lambeau made his biggest player pick in 1935 when he signed the great pass receiver, Don Hutson.

The Lambeau era ended after the 1949 season when he resigned to take over the Chicago Cardinals. He finished with a league record of 209 wins, 104 losses and 21 ties, plus 3-2 in post-season play.

Including the two years of losses under Lambeau, the Packers went through three coaches, Gene Ronzani, Liz Blackbourn and Scooter McLean, and 11 years of losing before Vince Lombardi came on the scene in 1959.

Ray Nitschke, a key figure on the Packers' great defense of the '60s, was named to the NFL's All-50 year team following a distinguished 15-year career. He also was a 3-time All-Pro selection while helping the Packers hold the opposition to an average of 15.4 points per game during the '60s decade.

60's

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

Lombardi's first team finished 7-5 and the happy and thankful fans flooded the airport when the team returned from their last game at San Francisco. Airport send-offs and celebrations were common during Lombardi's nine-year coaching reign.

Green Bay exploded in the sports world during the Lombardi period. Television was mushrooming and the size of the media seemingly tripled. The Packers, as they said then, were the standard by which all teams are compared.

The Packers reached the title game in 1960 but lost to the Eagles in Philadelphia's Franklin Field 16-13. They won it the next two years, beating the New York Giants, Lombardi's old team. It was a 37-0 title game in Green Bay in 1961 and 16-7 in New York's Yankee Stadium in 1962.

The best was yet to come--three straight championships, thus matching Lambeau's triple, in 1965-67, plus victories in the first two Super Bowls.

Packer history is loaded with great games but No. 1, historians agree, was the famed Ice Bowl at Lambeau Field Dec. 31, 1967. At stake: A trip to Super Bowl II and a third straight NFL Championship. It was 13 below zero at kickoff, not to mention a wind chill of 46 below.

The Dallas Cowboys, beaten by Green Bay in the NFL title game a year earlier, wanted revenge and they seemingly were on their way. They took a 17-14 lead on the first play of the fourth quarter when Dan Reeves and Lance Rentzel worked a 50-yard TD pass. The game developed into a dogfight until the clock showed 5:04 left. Then:

The Packers put on their greatest single TD drive in history. It covered 68 yards in 12 plays and ended with Quarterback Bart Starr sneaking one yard with only 13 seconds and no timeouts for the winning TD. It was a tribute to Lombardi. He wanted no part of a tying field goal; he wanted to win. "It was too cold for overtime," he later joked.

Aside from great games along the way, there also were great players. The Packers have 18 players in the Pro Football Hall of Fame at Canton and there should be many more. Those enshrined are Curly Lambeau, Johnny Blood, Don Hutson, Cal Hubbard, Clarke Hinkle, Mike Michalske, Arnie Herber, Vince Lombardi, Tony Canadeo, Jim Taylor, Forrest Gregg, Bart Starr, Ray Nitschke, Herb Adderley, Jim Ringo, Willie Davis, Paul Hornung and Willie Wood.

It took a spell for the Packers and their faithful fans to recover from the heady days of the 1960s. There were only three playoff appearances and five winning seasons in the next 24 years—not to mention six head coaches.

Defense chief Phil Bengtson followed Lombardi and had an 8-6 record in 1969. Dan Devine took over in 1971 and won the Central Division in 1972, only to lose the first playoff to Washington.

Hometown favorite Bart Starr succeeded Devine in '75 and worked nine seasons, producing two winning years and two playoff appearances. Forrest Gregg had no winners in his four years but Lindy Infante had an exciting 10-6 season in his four annums.

Packer president Bob Harlan, who succeeded Judge Robert Parins in the top chair, decided to put the Pack's football fortune in the hands of a strong football man, Ron Wolf, who in turn hired the San Francisco 49ers' offensive coordinator,

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

Mike Holmgren, as the Packs 11th head coach.

It is interesting to note that the only championship-winning head coaches in Packer history were Lambeau and Lombardi. They were both strong, forceful individuals. They ran the Packers' football operations with an iron hand. They were both general managers but their main forte was the players and the games.

There was a time when some of the other teams snickered about Green Bay's presence in the NFL. Back in the mid-1950s Commissioner Bert Bell once said, "there will always be a Green Bay in the National Football League." When Lombardi made Green Bay a household name, the Packer legend was secure.

Call it respect or whatever, the Packers seemed to have lost something since the Lombardi era. When the Philadelphia Eagle quarterback, Randall Cunningham, used the term "it's only Green Bay" before last year's matchup, it rankled a lot of feelings and perhaps showed what the enemy thought of Packerville.

Well, the Packers went out and whipped Cunningham and his Eagles and gained a lot of respect by finishing the season on a winning note. Plus, the Packers were able to out-bid some deep-pocketed opponents for the services of the Eagles' great defensive end, Reggie White.

Perhaps it's fitting that the NFL's new free agency era is starting in the Packers' 75th year. The Packers have always been able to adapt to change and, judging by the White signing, they came to play...and win!

PACKER FIRSTS

1. First scout to beat the bushes for players, including the deep south, Curly Lambeau.
2. First to have a publicity director, advance man, George W. Calhoun, 1920's.
3. First to provide off-season jobs, guaranteeing year-round pay checks.
4. First to employ punt as offensive weapon, any down, Verne Lewellen.
5. First to use forward pass extensively, Lambeau 37 of 45 in 1921 game.
6. Probably first to fine naughty players, admitted by Johnny Blood.
7. First to fly, 1938, including trip to California.
8. First to film games and some practices for coaching study, 1930s.
9. First to have week long practices, 1920s.
10. First to have a pep band, Packer Lumberjacks started in 1921.
11. First team in the NFL to have its own Hall of Fame.
12. First and only team to play in its original city since NFL started in 1921.

GREATEST KICKER EVER? IT COULD BE CHRIS JACKE

by Sharon Raboin
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Green Bay Packers special teams coach Nolan Cromwell says Chris Jacke has the potential to become the greatest kicker ever in the NFL.

Jacke's almost there already.

He's expected to move into fourth place this season behind Miami's Pete Stoyanovich, Kansas City's Nick Lowery and New Orleans' Morten Andersen on the all-time list of career field goal percentage leaders.

"Jacke's one of the best in the business," said Harry Sydney, the Packers starting fullback in 1992. "It's great. You know if you get inside the 40 it's three points."

Jacke's made 85 of 111 field goal attempts, or 76.6 percent. To qualify for the all-time list, kickers must make a minimum of 100 field goals. Jacke needs another 15. He's averaged 21 field goals in his first four seasons, so he's got a good chance.

Here's the top five kickers of all time going into this season:

Stoyanovich
Miami, 80.8%, 101 of 125 field goals.
Lowery
Kansas City, 79.3%, 284 of 358.
Andersen
New Orleans, 77.2%, 217 of 281.
Gary Anderson
Pittsburgh, 76.5%, 257 of 336.
Donald Igwebuike
Tampa Bay, 75.5%, 108 of 143.

Jacke's assaulted the Packers record books. He's set team records for most consecutive field goals (15), most field goals in a single game (5), most field goals of 50 or more yards (6) and shares the record for the longest field goal (53 yards).

That's not all. He's hit 33 of 35 field goals inside the 30 yard line. He's converted 132 point-after attempts, including 30 of 30 last season to extend his consecutive streak to 86, the longest in the NFC.

"He's got such a strong will to be a winner and succeed," Cromwell said.

Which record does Jacke value the most?

None of the above.

"That I'm here four years," Jacke said. "Kicking is a hard position to stay, especially in a climate such as this. One of the things I'll look back on, I'm having such a good career in a climate where you shouldn't have a good career."

Jacke's statistics are remarkable considering the weather. Lambeau Field can be a tough place to kick come November and December. Harsh temperatures. Blustery winds. Frozen turf. Slippery footing.

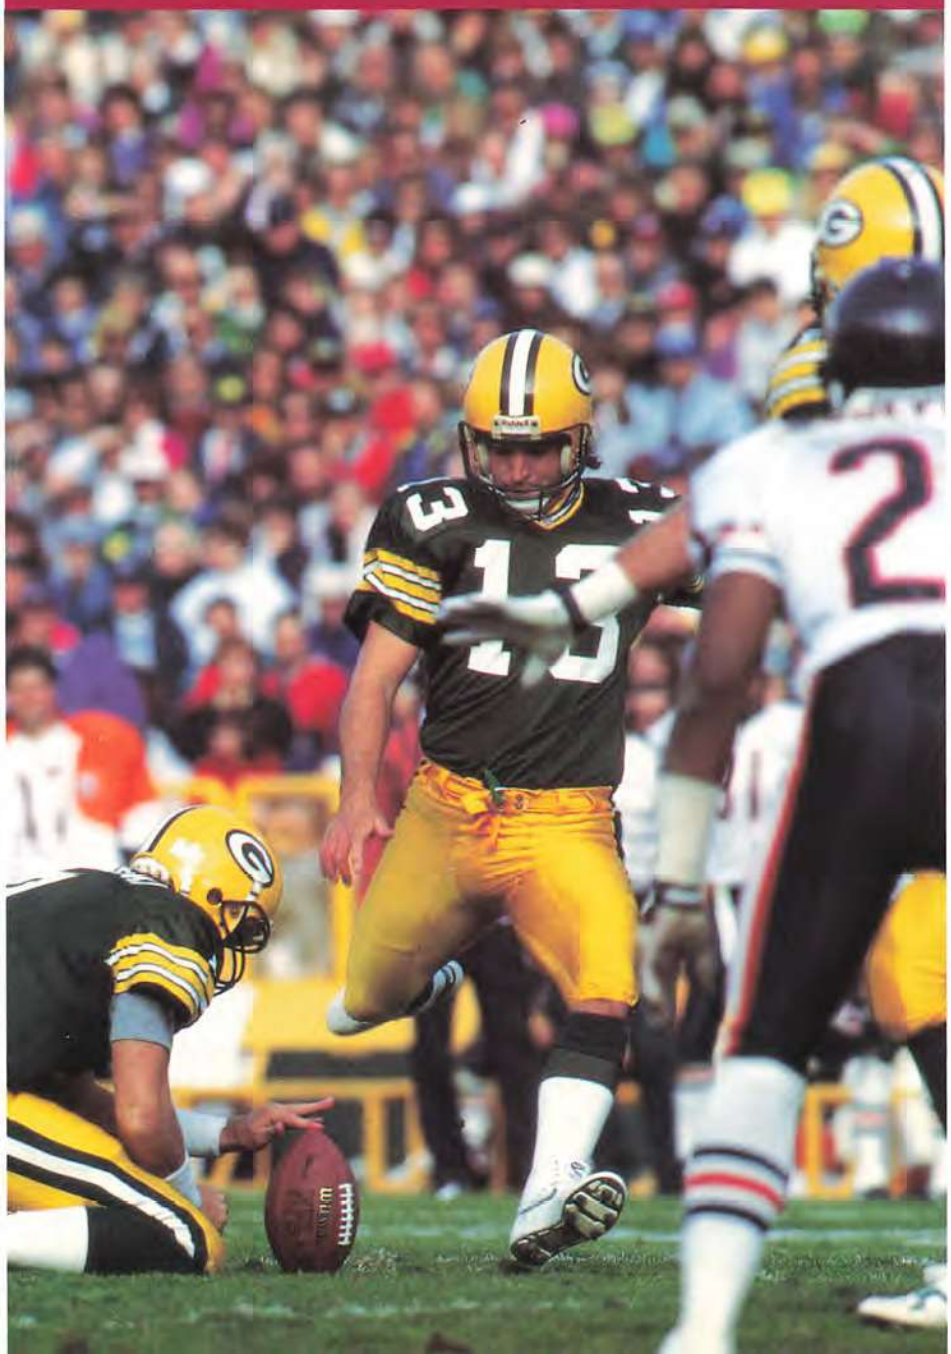
Of the list of top five kickers, each has had the advantage of playing in a warm climate, indoors or on artificial turf.

Jacke, of course, hasn't.

"I think maybe it's made me a better kicker," Jacke said. "The concentration level is higher than it would be if I was in a dome."

Kicking here is tough. Ask the parade of pretenders: Max Zendejas, Dale Dawson, Dean Dorsey and Curtis Burrow who bungled 12 of 25 field goals and six point-after attempts in 1988.

The kicking game was a calamity when the Packers selected Jacke in the sixth round of the 1989 draft out of the University of Texas-El Paso. Jacke has given the Packers stability at a critical position.



Practically Perfect: Chris Jacke, a sixth round draft choice who has paid handsome dividends, has missed only one extra point in his 4-year career. Here he makes a conversion against the Chicago Bears. He enters the 1993 season with a string of 86 consecutive PATs, second longest in Packer history.

"I really feel confident with him kicking the ball," Cromwell said. "I wouldn't want anyone else."

Jacke has excelled because he has the motivation, confidence and temperament as well as the mechanics and leg strength.

Jacke takes his job seriously. He works hard to prepare himself physically, and mentally, to perform to the best of his ability. He's one of just 13 Packers players who make Green Bay his permanent home. He works out five days a week at the Packers' facilities.

Ever since he entered his senior season at the University of Texas -El Paso, Jacke has set up his own off-season workout program. He never takes more than a week off. He kicks, lifts weights and plays a mean game of racquetball.

"I don't know of any other kicker with the work ethic that Chris' got," Cromwell said. "He will do everything possible to make himself the best kicker he can be.

"Chris could go out anytime of the year and kick and he'd be pretty much the same. He doesn't give himself a chance to lose the technique and power that he's developed."

Jacke's proven to be a clutch kicker. He's booted seven, game-winning kicks, including a 41-yarder with no time left in a 27-24 victory over Philadelphia last season.

"I can't tell you what's going through my head," Jacke said."I think you're in such a zone. I go out there. Look at the spot. It's such a rhythmic thing. I've done it so often. I don't really think about it."

Jacke appears to be immune to pressure. Maybe it's his personality. He's even-tempered, unemotional. He's confident, but not cocky. He's not given to self-doubt. He's taught himself how to kick, and he knows exactly what happens when he misses. He's able to make adjustments.

He says he doesn't like a game to come down to a final kick, but he doesn't mind it. He says he doesn't get nervous.

"The guys that let the pressure get to them are the guys that are going to miss."

"The guys that let the pressure get to them are the guys that are going to miss," Jacke said. "I've always taken the approach that it's just a kick. (Former Packers coach Lindy Infante) used to say, 'This isn't rocket science or brain surgery. It's just football. What we're doing isn't life threatening. It's just sports.'"

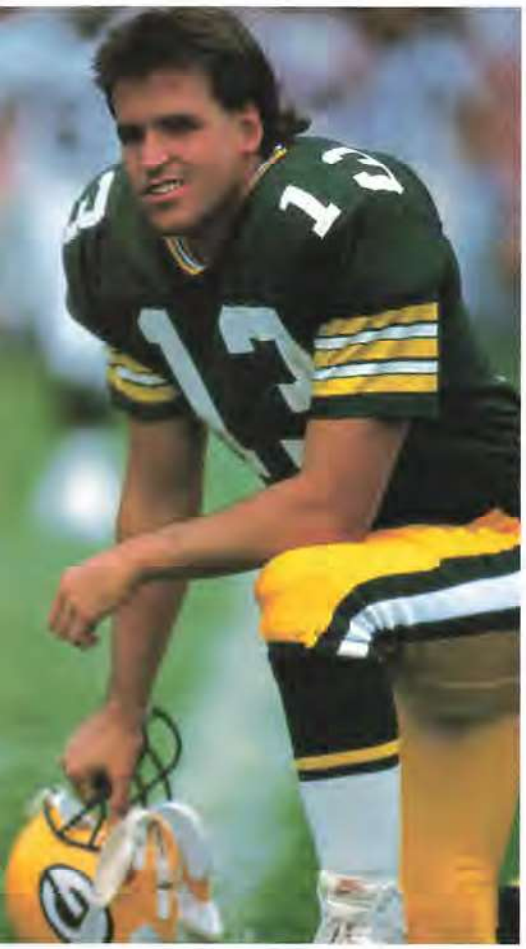
The rockiest time of Jacke's career was early last season. Jacke missed three of his first eight field goals, including a 25-yarder, his first miss inside the 30-yard line in 31 attempts when his regular holder, Don Majkowski, was sidelined with injury.

But Jacke never lost confidence.

"I try to make every field goal and do what I can with kickoffs," Jacke said. "As long as I'm doing the best I can, I can live with it."

Jacke says he'd like to finish his career in Green Bay.

The Packers would like that, too.



After only four seasons, placekicker Chris Jacke is the sixth ranking scorer in the Packers' 73-year NFL history with 386 points and ranks second highest in career field goal accuracy percentage in team annals.

Bracing Injuries

James H. Taillon, C.O.

Ever since Joe Namath wore a Lenox Hill™ knee brace as he led the Jets to a Super Bowl victory, there has been an interest in what braces can do for athletes.

Properly designed braces allow you to continue working (or playing) under circumstances that kept you on the sidelines.

Modern composite materials substitute for leather and metal and effect major improvements in orthoses (braces). Composites cause a noticeable weight reduction plus better wear and shock resistance. The resulting extended endurance for the wearer enhances their performance.

The choice of type of brace is not an easy one. The first person to consult is your physician. If a brace will be helpful, an orthotist will design and apply one that provides stability and protection.

Braces can be designed for almost any activity. The most common braces used by athletes are knee braces, ankle braces and foot braces (arch supports). This reflects the high incidence of injuries to these areas. In basketball and hockey it is common to design protection for the face, in particular the eyes and nose.

All sports and many jobs can produce back and neck injuries. These must be treated by your doctor first! If bracing is indicated, there are a wide variety of options available that will allow you to keep on 'playing.' Even chronic back pain can be treated successfully.

For information about how braces can help, contact your physician or call The Brace Centers, Ltd.

Nothing succeeds like success...

The Green Bay Packers, coming off their second best record in the past 20 years, "returned" to the Pro Bowl in 1992 after a one-year absence.

The Green and Gold's in-season upswing—to 9-7 following a 4-and-12 finish the year before—was substantially reflected in their representation in the National Football League's annual showcase at Honolulu. Their three representatives—quarterback Brett Favre, wide receiver Sterling Sharpe and free safety Chuck Cecil—were the most they have had in the Pro Bowl since 1989, when quarterback Don Majkowski, linebacker Tim Harris, running back Brent Fullwood and Sharpe were Green Bay's standard bearers.

Sharpe had been the Packers' only representative following the 1989 and 1990 seasons and Green Bay was not represented in last year's classic.

Of the trio Favre provided the most memorable moment for the capacity crowd of 50,000, unfurling the longest pass completion of the game. A 48-yard strike to San Francisco's Jerry Rice, it gave the National Football Conference a first down at the AFC's 2-yard-line in the third quarter. Unfortunately for Favre and his teammates, then locked in a 13-13 tie with the AFC, they were not able to capitalize on the opportunity. Favre himself was stopped short of the goal on a fourth down sneak from the one-yard-line and the AFC went on to win in overtime, 23-20.

Favre finished his stint with 4 completions in 8 attempts for 74 yards, with no interceptions.

Cecil, who has since signed with the Phoenix Cardinals as an unrestricted free agent, had his moment in the spotlight when Tim McDonald of Phoenix intercepted a Neil O'Donnell pass and lateraled to the Packer free safety. Cecil shortly handed off to Deion Sanders, who managed an 8-yard return.

Sharpe, a starter at wide receiver and coming off a record-breaking season (108 catches, an all-time NFL mark), caught one pass for 7 yards. On one other occasion, he appeared to be open on a deep post pattern but the pass by the 49ers' Steve Young was underthrown and intercepted.

Brett Favre, who did not become a starter until the 4th game of the 1992 season, was named to the Pro Bowl after setting an all-time Packer single season record for passing percentage and became the youngest quarterback ever to play in the all-star game.

Sterling Sharpe was a Pro Bowl selection for the third time in four years after setting a new NFL single season reception record in 1992 with 108 catches.

Chuck Cecil, exhibiting a customary battle scar on the bridge of his nose, in 1992 became the first Packer defensive back named to the Pro Bowl since 1978, when Willie Buchanon was so honored.

Seventy-Five Seasons of Memories and Mystique in Green Bay

THE PACKERS!

The following is an excerpt from "THE PACKERS! Seventy-Five Seasons of Memories and Mystique in Green Bay" by Steve Cameron. This official commemorative publication of the Green Bay Packers can be ordered by calling 1-800-935-7799.

It makes you think of perusing the menu at an exceptional restaurant. The wonderful entrees are overwhelming—in fact, there is such an abundance of delightful possibilities that it's tough to place an order.

Likewise, when a football team has won 11 world championships and been involved in so many dramatic, historic battles, it ought to be downright difficult to single out the most memorable.

But it isn't.

Yes, the Packers have played for titles in remarkable circumstances, in various settings and with assorted results, since the 1920s. They've participated in some spectacular shootouts—remember that Monday Night Madness, 48-47 over Washington in 1983? And that same wild season, Green Bay locked up in no less than five overtime thrillers, an NFL record.

Despite all that, despite achieving triple championships twice—a feat no other franchise has accomplished even once—and despite the fact that Green Bay won the first-ever Super Bowl, the one game all Packers fans remember most is easy to pick.

Just ask anyone in Wisconsin and surrounding environs—for that matter, ask football enthusiasts from anywhere else—and the odds are pretty good they can recite chapter and verse just exactly where they were and what they were feeling on Dec. 31, 1967.

Pack rooters who weren't even born in '67 act as though they were, because everyone knows about the Ice Bowl.

"People come up to me all the time and talk about where they were sitting, what it was like and everything," current Packers quarterback Brett Favre said. "In Green Bay, that game will always seem like it happened yesterday. I'm getting used to it. I'm one of those people who wasn't even alive then, but now I feel like I was at the Ice Bowl too."

And so that's precisely where any recap of huge games in Packers history surely must start. Right there, a foot from the goal line, as Bart Starr stood freezing along with everyone else in 13-below weather, preparing to take a snap from center with 16 seconds to play.

It was, of course, the NFL championship game against Dallas—a showdown to determine whether or not Vince Lombardi's final Packer team would advance to Super Bowl II and keep alive its dream of winning a third straight title.

The two things almost everyone recalls so vividly about that game for the ages were the weather—so brutal that league officials consulted doctors before deciding to go ahead and so dangerous that several players suffered frostbite—and Starr's now-famous sneak for the precious few inches that provided a 21-17 victory.

"I've answered more questions about that one play than probably everything that happened in my whole career," Starr said. "Even now, people ask about that sneak in the Ice Bowl."

But in reality, there were some amazing moments which led to the final play—including a steely-eyed gamble by the normally conservative Lombardi.

The Ice Bowl was really three games in one.

The Packers coasted through the first, ignoring the temperatures, the rapidly freezing turf and all the Cowboys' fury. Starr heaved 8- and 43-yard touchdown passes to Boyd Dowler in the first half as Green Bay zoomed to a 14-0 lead while the shivering Cowboys seemed lifeless and totally out of it.

Then matters turned dramatically upside down.

Dallas defensive end George Andrie pounced on a Starr fumble and lurched 7 yards for a touchdown. The usually sure-handed Willie Wood bobbled a punt, setting up Danny Villanueva's 21-yard field goal that cut the margin to 14-10 at halftime.

The Cowboys, who lost the title game in the previous year at home when Tom Brown intercepted Don Meredith's desperation, fourth-down pass to preserve Green Bay's 34-27 victory, were a proud team, as well. Now they were proving it, stuffing the Packer offense and taking a 17-14 lead on the first play of the fourth quarter when Dan Reeves pitched a halfback option pass to Lance Rentzel, a play that covered 51 yards and left the crowd of 50,861 even colder.

All of which brought the Packers face to face with destiny—on their own 32-yard line with 4:54 remaining and out of second chances.

"I know I was thinking, 'Well, maybe this is the year we don't make it, that it all ends,'" guard Jerry Kramer said. "But I know that every guy made up his mind that if we were going down, we were going to go down trying."

Starr felt far more upbeat.

"That was the point that our mental conditioning took over," he said. "You have to remember that we were a supremely confident team. When we got the ball that last time, I got in the huddle and you could see the look on the face of every player. There was that gleam in their eyes.

"I didn't say one word. I didn't have to.

"In the course of a ballgame, you don't really have time to reflect on things that have happened up to that point, but I do feel we felt responsible for the tough situation we were in. My fumble gave Dallas one touchdown and Willie Wood's fumble gave them a field goal, so our defense really hadn't given up anything except that one long play. I know that definitely crossed my mind."

The last drive was textbook stuff. Even though he was having trouble gripping the ball because of the cold, Starr began throwing passes that were magnificently conceived even if not aesthetically gorgeous.

Running backs Donny Anderson and Chuck Mercein—the latter a midseason pickup who wasn't able to stick on anybody else's roster—made brilliant decisions running routes against the Cowboys secondary and kept getting themselves open. Starr found Anderson for healthy gains when the Dallas linebackers dropped deep and then, when the backers closed to the middle, he dumped off to a wide-open Mercein near the sideline.

"Chuck and Donny were both very intelligent, very alert players who could read what the coverage was giving us and finding the open spots," Starr said. "Chuck came back to the huddle after one play and said the linebackers were ignoring him and he'd be open if we ran the same play. We did, and he was."

But the clock kept ticking.

After the two-minute warning, Starr hit Anderson for nine yards, then Mercein for 19 and a first down on the Dallas 11. The crowd was in full howl by this time, no matter the wind-chill.

"Right then, I made the best play call of my life," Starr said. "We hadn't run a 'give' play all day. We'd been saving it and this was the time."

The idea was to prey on the quickness of Dallas tackle Bob Lilly, who was relentless in his pursuit along the line of scrimmage. The play called for left guard Gale Gillingham to pull to his right—presuming that Lilly would read that key and follow him. Mercein would then hit the vacant hole, assuming the unblocked Lilly was gone and that left tackle Bob Skoronski could hold his block on right end Andrie.

"Lilly committed himself right away and chased the guard," Mercein said. "You either run right behind the guy or he gets you because nobody blocks him. I think if I'd had a little better footing, I might have been able to drive the last couple of yards."

As it was, Dallas' Mel Renfro dragged him down on the 3-yard line. The Packers were in range of an easy field goal to tie the game, but with 54 seconds left, they were going for the win.

Anderson scuffled forward for a couple of yards and first down on the next play, but then on two more tries, he barely got back to the line of scrimmage. On the second of those carries, Anderson slipped and nearly fumbled before being engulfed about a foot from the end zone.

So Starr called time out—the Packers' last—with 16 seconds left.

Decision time.

The Packers had plenty of options, but the situation was fraught with danger. They could try the field goal, the safest course although with the footing so treacherous, Don Chandler's kick wouldn't quite be a cinch. Or they could pass, leaving them another play for the field goal if nobody was open and Starr had to unload the ball.

Or they could shoot the works. Run it again. And be out of time if they fell short.

There have been dozens of versions passed around about just what went on when Starr reached the sideline to meet with Lombardi. And what happened afterward.

The truth: Starr came off the field convinced that a wedge play would work. That blocking scheme called for Kramer and center Ken Bowman to double-team Dallas tackle Jethro Pugh, who had been a tough man to move all day. But Starr also suspected the call he liked and felt totally confident about—31-wedge, a dive by fullback Mercein—might be trouble because of the conditions.

"The scoreboard at that end of the field casts a huge shadow," Starr said. "If it's possible, that spot was even harder than the rest of the field. As I'm telling this story right now, I'm sitting at a granite table, and I can knock on this granite and tell you the field was every bit as hard as this table.

"I decided that we had a better chance if I kept the ball instead of giving it to Chuck. Our backs were having problems slipping around. I was right up there at the line of scrimmage, where I could kind of wiggle my feet a little for traction and just lunge forward. I asked our offensive linemen if they could get enough footing to block for the wedge play, and they said they could. That's what I told Lombardi."

And the reply?

"I remember exactly what he said," Starr recalled. "He told me: 'Then run it and let's get the hell out of here.' That was it, word for word."

Starr didn't exactly share all his information in the huddle, though. He decided not to tell anyone that he'd be keeping the ball.

"Bart called the 31-wedge and we all thought Chuck would get it," Bowman said. "Even Chuck thought so. Bart was the only one out there who knew what he was going to do."

And what he did, of course, was squeeze into the tiny crack opened by Kramer and Bowman, who managed to get Pugh standing straight up with no drive left in his legs to jam up the play.

"I knew it was a touchdown as soon as the ball was snapped," Starr said. "It was really easier than it looked once those guys got the block. But look at pictures of that play. You'll see Chuck Howley, Dallas' outside linebacker, on top of me just over the goal line. Do you realize how hard and how furiously he had to be closing from the outside to get all the way in there?

"That was a tribute to the Cowboys, and how they played. They were a great, great team. That's one thing that made the Ice Bowl so famous, I believe. It wasn't just the weather or us going for three straight championships or the last drive.

"It was the fact that you had two truly great teams. That brings out the best in everybody."

And the outcome brought out chaos as the fans—frozen stiff but utterly delirious— rushed the field and somehow clambered atop those stone-cold goal posts.

Once in the locker room, the Packers seemed to realize that they had pulled together one more time, one spectacular time, and produced a comeback that was the stuff of legends.

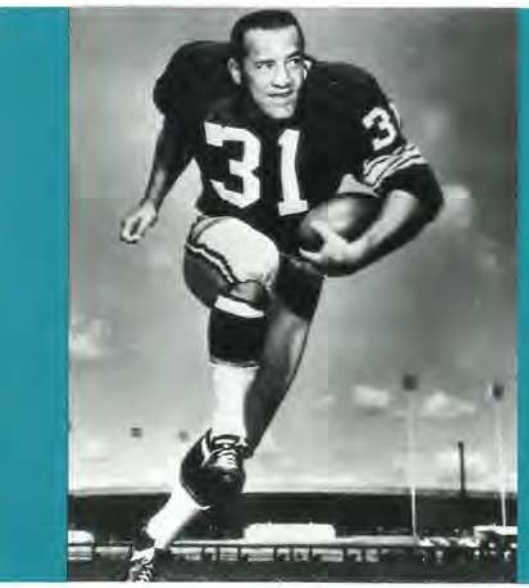
Jim Taylor, a classic fullback, has been retired for a quarter of a century, but is still the Packers' all-time leading rusher. Taylor, who has had five consecutive 1,000-yard rushing seasons, gained 8,207 yards in 1,811 attempts over 9 seasons.



Clarke Hinkle, a four-time All-Pro selection and an early enshrinee in the Pro Football Hall of Fame, was one of the most versatile players in NFL history, A tough, bruising runner, (he remains the fourth-ranking rusher in Packer annals), he was a talented receiver, fine blocker and excellent placekicker as well as an intuitive, hard hitting linebacker.

Packer Report

Reggie White once thought "any place but Green Bay."

Mike Holmgren used to tell San Francisco players, when he was a 49ers' coach, that those who didn't perform would be sent to Green Bay.

Well, the truth—as both of those men will now tell you—is: The Packers do not have to take a back seat to anyone.

One man who articulated that notion, on the very day free agency became a reality in the National Football League, was Packer General Manager Ron Wolf, who said in January: "I don't think Green Bay has to take a back seat to any team or franchise in the NFL. If a person wants to play football and that's the sole reason for his existence, he can come here and do just that. He doesn't have to worry about anything else. It's a great community, a great place to play, the fans are marvelous and we've got excellent facilities."

The Packer Corporation is putting its money where its general manager's mouth is on that last point—those "excellent facilities"—to the tune of $6.3 million this year and next.

A $1.6 million expansion was recently completed on the team's headquarters building; a new $1.7 million color replay scoreboard is being added to Lambeau Field; and next year a $3 million indoor practice facility will be built across the street.

Headquarters gain 20,500 square feet

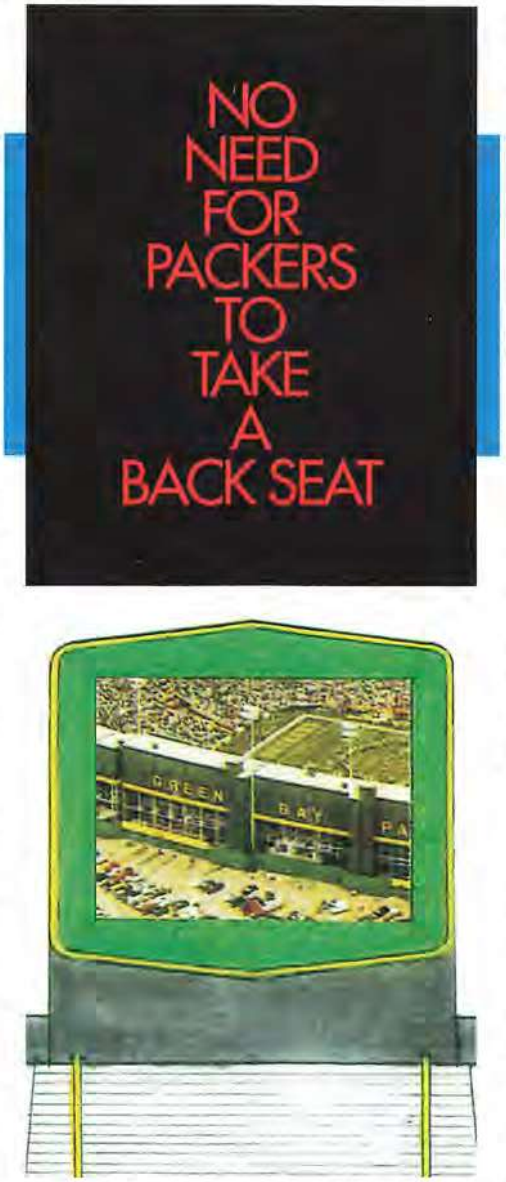
The gleaming brick-and-glass 20,500-square-foot addition to 1265 Lombardi Ave. is the fifth addendum to the original 1961 structure. It brings the headquarters to a total of 80,500 square feet, housing 65-70 employees, not counting players.

But players will most likely be the prime users of the tri-level expansion's largest room, a 70 x 84-foot gymnasium featuring a basketball court and running track. Twenty-one laps make a mile on the latter, which is suspended at a mezzanine level.

"Our football people thought the addition of a basketball court and running track would appeal to players greatly and hopefully keep more players in Green Bay during the off-season," Packer President Bob Harlan related.

The idea actually came from former Head Coach Lindy Infante, Harlan said. "We started talking about it, then when Mike (Holmgren) got here, I told him what our ideas were and he thought it was a great idea, so we just continued to pursue it," the president said.

Packer Pro Shop customers and employees are also prime beneficiaries. The new Shop features 1,800 usable square feet, more than five times its previous total of 350 square feet.



Instant replay has come to Lambeau Field with the installation of the Sony Jumbotron color replay board. The huge board, 20 feet high and 26 feet wide, was used at the Seville Expo in 1992 and is identical to the one utilized during Super Bowl XXVII at the the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, CA last January.

"We had completely outgrown the Pro Shop," Harlan understated. "We had taken what had been a small interview room and turned it into a pro shop several years ago, just to see how it would work out.

"It worked extremely well. But we couldn't stock or run it like a real retail store, which is what we wanted to do. Now we have the capability —not only with the size, but with the fact we have brought in a person with retail experience, Kate Hogan, to be the coordinator for the store. It will be handled very professionally, which is what we wanted to do."

Hogan, a Green Bay native, is part of the marketing staff which moved into expanded offices in the addition's second floor. Marketing is a department the Packers did not even have until 1989. "Now it's become a three-person staff that we think has potential for great growth," said Harlan.

Growth has also occurred in the other areas housed in the addition—public relations and the media who cover the Packers.

"We had totally outgrown our public-relations department that we had moved into in 1983," said Harlan, whose team has gone from two public-relations employees to five during those 10 years.

They have new offices in the addition and share several conference rooms with marketing.

For the first time, there is a separate working library—housing the history of this storied franchise in 815 square feet.

Media covering the Packers benefit from the addition's 48-seat auditorium, which will become the site of all press conferences. Theater-style seating will include individual jacks, allowing media members to plug their tape recorders directly into a feed from the dais' microphones, rather than scrambling to place their recorders on the head table.

Still and video photographers will be positioned across the back of the auditorium, on a two-tiered riser. They will shoot with the benefit of permanently mounted studio-quality lights suspended from the ceiling.

Provisions have been made for easy routing of cables carrying feeds outdoors to transmission trucks, used for live coverage of events. Other cables will distribute press-conference audio to the Lambeau Field press box and private boxes; the new gymnasium; and select offices throughout the administrative headquarters.

The auditorium also has permanently mounted TV monitors tied into the local cable system and retractable equipment for the showing of videotapes.

Beat writers are further convenienced by the availability of eight small, private kiosks, featuring a work surface and direct connections to tie their portable computers into phone lines.

The project also includes a re-design of the corporate entrance and main lobby area.

Replay board debuts in August

The 1993 Lambeau Field debut of Green Bay's Packers will be their final exhibition game, Aug. 27.

The stadium's new $1.7 million color replay scoreboard will also debut that night.

Perched atop the center of the north end zone will be a Sony Jumbotron, 20 feet high and 26 feet wide, capable of providing nearly instant review of every play of every game.

This particular board was used at the Construction is scheduled to begin next January on a new Packer indoor practice facility to replace the current structure. An architect's sketch of the new building, which will encompass 112,400 square feet and cost $3 million, is shown above.

Seville Expo in 1992 and is identical to the one utilized during Super Bowl XXVII in Pasadena's Rose Bowl this past January.

"It is something we feel will add to the enjoyment of our fans at the stadium," Harlan said. "It's a feature we have wanted to provide for some time to enhance their game experience.

"We had asked our marketing department, over the last couple of years, to make acquisition of a replay board a priority. And I appreciate the efforts Jeff Cieply, our marketing director, put into making it a reality, because he has worked extremely hard on this project."

The new board, which weighs 19,800 pounds, contains 57,600 light-emitting elements consuming an average of 36,000 watts. "It is approximately 50 percent brighter than boards installed at Candlestick Park and Joe Robbie Stadium," Cieply said.

"We will be using a Macintosh computer with a Sony-manufactured software package for operation of the board," he explained. "We are bidding out production to local companies and the one contracted to provide the service will bring in a television production truck for each game. Our computer will take the output from the truck and display it on the board.

"The truck will be manned by three or four technicians on game day. We will be taking the network feed and also use our own cameras to supplement what the network gives us. If, for example, we want to show a pre-game ceremony on the field, or our own highlights video or the weekly NFL highlights packages, we will be able to do that. When the stadium is used for events—such as a concert—this capability will make the stadium more attractive to the fans attending."

Initially, under Packer policy, there will be no advertising on the board. "Eventually, there will be," Cieply said. "But we want to make sure the board is up and running first. Over time, advertising will help defray the cost of the board."

This board is the first of a three-step process planned for Lambeau. "The next step is to put in a new board—with replay capability—at the south end to replace the one currently in use there, so we will have a replay board at both ends of the stadium," Harlan said. "The third step is to improve the stadium's overall sound system."

The Jumbotron is being located to accommodate the president's long-range vision of the north end zone. "The placement of the board will not affect future construction possibilities in that area," said Harlan, "such as the building of additional private boxes. We could build around it."

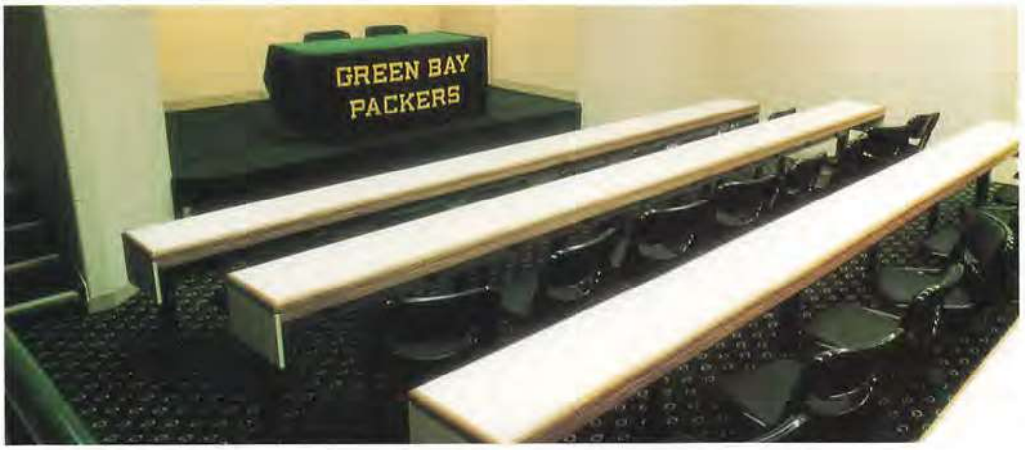
His vision for that end zone includes the possibility of a club room for catered functions and meetings.

Indoor-practice facility set for 1994

A shorter-range project, one which is literally on the drawing boards right now, will be built across Oneida Street from Lambeau: A $3 million, 112,400-square foot indoor practice facility which will replace—and dwarf—the current one.

"It will be the indoor facility in all of football; college, or pro," said Wolf, the Packers normally restrained general manager and the chief instigator of this project, which will begin as soon as the 1993 Packers finish their season. Completion is slated for April, 1994.

Top Flight: Packer players will now have this spacious, 84-by-70-foot gymnasium as a conditioning and recreational facility. The basketball court is surmounted by a 21-lap-to-the-mile running track. There is also is a multi-purpose area adjacent to the court.



The Media 'Mecca': The auditorium in the new media center in the new west wing of the Packer administration building will be the site of Head Coach Mike Holmgren's practice week and post-game news conferences. The theater-style area contains 48 seats and a 2-tier deck for TV photographers, plus state-of-the-art lighting and sound systems.

The new L-shaped building will contain two fields instead of one and have a ceiling 85-90 feet high. That should allow for realistic punting, something the current structure does not.

It will be 452 feet long and 270 feet wide, replacing the present indoor practice facility—known to as "The Barn"—which is basically a glorified pole barn. The heated and insulated facility is only 230 by 240 feet. The ceiling is 65 feet above the single field, which is 80 yards long.

The new building will have to the south a 70-yard field running east-west under a 90-foot ceiling. To the north will be a 60-yarder, running north-south under an 85-foot-high ceiling. Each field will also have a 10-yard end zone.

Having two fields will allow "both sides to practice and practice intelligently," said Wolf.

The present indoor field is crowned. Its replacements will be flat, allowing them to be used jointly if desired. It also will give the coaching staff a better vantage point to view either or both fields.

The building will be heated, with a potential maximum of 60 degrees, and will include equipment areas, storage rooms and toilet facilities.

The Barn, built in 1982 for $750,000, will be razed and the new facility constructed over its area, as well as most of the current east-west outdoor practice field. Thus, outdoor practices will then be confined to the current north-south field which runs parallel to Oneida Street, along the thoroughfare's east side.

That means its natural-grass surface will take more of a beating. But Holmgren took his team inside more often last November and December than either of his two most-recent predecessors. It is the San Francisco native's philosophy that players practice better when they are not worried about being cold.

"Ron and Mike really felt they needed this type of facility," Harlan told the Milwaukee Sentinel. "It's going to be a beautiful building both inside and outside. We wanted it to be first class and that's why we wanted their input.

"Some of the players who have been through have been really impressed. When you show them the (administration) building and these plans, they have to be impressed."

Count White among that number. "He was impressed with the new indoor facility," agent Jimmy Sexton said.

With completion of the new practice facility, the Packer Corporation will have spent approximately $25 million since 1982 on improvements and additions to Lambeau Field, their administration building/training headquarters, the current practice facility and this new one.

Those projects include: Construction of the existing indoor practice facility in 1982, remodeling and expansion of the administration building and training quarters in 1983, doubling of Lambeau's rest room facilities in 1984, construction of 72 private boxes in 1985, installation of a new scoreboard in 1986, implementing an improved sound system in 1987, expansion of the visitors' dressing room facilities—including a tunnel from the field to the locker room — and remodeling of the press box in 1988, and construction of 1,920 club seats and 36 additional private boxes in 1989.

The City of Green Bay spent $960,000 to build 32,150-seat Lambeau Field in 1957. Thirty-six years and six additions later, it holds 59,543.

SUZANNE STEHLIK bought a Saturn coupe because she didn't have enough excitement in her life.

Bored with her econobox, Suzanne wanted a new car. Something that felt more like her weekend and less like her week. Because Monday to Friday, she's a property tax analyst.

But come Saturday? Different story. She skydives. She skis. Or she plays with her pets—two Rottweilers and a cockatiel that can whistle half of the Flintstones' theme.

The Saturn SC2

Why is our SC2 so fun to drive? For some, it's the 124 horsepower engine. For others, it's the sport-tuned suspension. But for you, all we can say is, "Here's the key."

SATURN.

So you can guess why Suzanne chose a Saturn coupe. (She says it has the styling, the handling, the performance and all the other fun-to-drive stuff her freefall/downhill/cartoon self wants.)

And, funny thing, the price didn't bother her tax analyst side one bit.

JACKIE HARRIS HAS THAT LOOK

by Tim Froberg

One of Jackie Harris' favorite hobbies is collecting old records.

The Green Bay Packers are confident that Harris will be adding some new records to his collection.

For starters, there's the Packers' single season record for most receptions by a tight end, which Harris fell one short of last season. And considering Harris' age (25) and exceptional talent, he could eventually break the team record for most career receptions by a tight end (322) held by Paul Coffman.

Harris, quiet and unassuming, would rather talk about the kind of records made of plastic. And if the gifted young record collector-pass receiver had to dig into the musical archives and select a record that would best describe his 1992 season, he might choose "Come Together" by the Beatles.

It all came together for Harris in '92 following two uneventful seasons. Not only did Harris nail down a full-time spot in the starting lineup, but he emerged as one of the best tight ends in the National Football League. What made his coming out party even sweeter was the long-awaited team success experienced by the Packers under first-year coach Mike Holmgren.

"My first two years here seemed like five years," said Harris with a chuckle. "We were losing and I wasn't playing that much. Everything was sure a lot more fun last year."

"In our offense, the tight end becomes more of a highlight. He's involved in every facet of the passing game."

Harris started the season in low gear, sharing playing time with veteran Ed West just like he had done the two previous seasons. But once Holmgren was sure that Harris had caught on to the new offense, he set him free catching passes. And when opportunity knocked, Harris nearly tore the door off the hinges.

Despite not moving into the starting lineup until Week 6 against Cleveland, Harris enjoyed a Pro Bowl caliber year with 55 receptions for 595 yards and two touchdowns. Only Dallas' Jay Novacek had more catches among NFL tight ends and Coffman was the only Packer tight end to catch more passes in a single season (56 in 1979).

"It was basically just getting an opportunity to show what I could do," Harris said. "I think Mike's and Lindy's (former coach Lindy Infante) systems were similar. The routes aren't that different. But in Mike's system, they just use the tight end a lot more."

Andy Reid, the team's tight end coach, explained: "In our offense, the tight end becomes more of a highlight. He's involved in every facet of the passing game—drop-back, play-action, screens out of the backfield. In a lot of systems, a tight end is nothing more than a blocker."

A natural receiver who played two seasons as a wideout in college, the sleek 6-foot-4 inch Harris is a fluid, agile tight end with excellent hands and the rare ability to get deep. Packer GM Ron Wolf calls him the "best tight end in the NFC" and Harris has been compared favorably to former Cleveland great Ozzie Newsome, who revolutionized the position with his speed and receiving ability.

Harris appreciates the compliment, but doesn't feel the comparison is deserved.

"I couldn't understand it when those Ozzie Newsome comments came out," he said. "He's one of the all-time greats and I'm not even close to that level right now. I don't know if there will ever be another Ozzie Newsome. Hopefully, if I keep working hard, I can be one of the league's better tight ends. But I don't think I'm there now."

While his forte is his pass-catching ability, the Pine Bluff, Ark. native has worked hard on his blocking to ensure he is not a one-dimensional player. Harris is quick to credit West, his close friend and mentor, with his development into a solid blocker. One of the league's premier blocking tight ends, West took Harris aside during Harris' rookie season and showed him that it takes a lot more than sure hands and quick feet to become a quality tight end in the NFL.

"The first time he saw me get down in a stance, he shook his head and felt sorry for me," recalled Harris. "I owe it all to Ed. He took the extra time to work with me. Coaches can teach you technique, but you can learn more from watching and listening to a guy like Ed who's done it all these years.

"A lot of blocking is attitude, and Ed's toughness kind of rubs off on you. There were times the first two seasons when we'd be coming back from a game and I'd be disappointed because I'd only caught a pass or two. Ed wouldn't let me complain about it because he loved just being out there knocking people around. I'd hate to think where I'd be right now without Ed."

Noted Reid, "Ed's been a tremendous influence on him. He looks up to him like a big brother. Ed is the epitome of hard work, a free agent who started on the bottom and worked his way up. I'm proud and so is Ed of the way that Jackie has improved as a blocker. He was so willing and eager to learn that part and put forth a diligent effort to get better. He's a very intelligent kid and he'll work at it."

Much of Harris' work ethic comes from his mother, Charlie. Jackie's father passed away when Jackie was just 10 months old and Charlie worked long hours at a Pine Bluff laundromat to put food on the table for Jackie and his eight siblings. Jackie still spends his off-season in Pine Bluff, a town of roughly 50,000 in Southeastern Arkansas, and the home of Hall of Famer and Packer receiving legend Don Hutson.

"She's showed me that just about anything can be accomplished through hard work and constantly preached the value of an education," Jackie said. "She had nine kids to raise, yet she didn't complain, but just kept working hard and did the best she could."

Said Reid, "Jackie's mom is a very special person. She's a tough, tough lady."

After landing all-state honors as a wide receiver at Pine Bluff's Dollarway High, Harris became a three-year starter and the all-time career receptions leader (147 catches) at Northeast Louisiana. He was moved to tight end his junior season after two years at wide receiver.

"We had so many good wide receivers and it was really a way to disguise another receiver and get everyone into the game," Harris said. "I didn't mind at all because instead of going up against defensive backs, I was suddenly being matched up against these big linebackers.

"I knew I had to put some weight on. That summer I went from 218 to 240 and, believe it or not, I actually got faster. We had a great weight training and conditioning program there."

A fourth-round pick of the Packers in the 1990 draft, Harris was slowly eased into the Packer system, catching 12 passes as a rookie and 24 during the 1991 season. He also saw action on special teams.

"I was getting a little antsy to play more," he said. "But I think it was a plus because it gave me a chance to work on things I didn't do so well, like blocking. And playing on special teams was something I enjoyed and it gave me a chance to show my athletic ability."

Harris' athletic ability was on full display last season and his development into a legitimate offensive weapon played a pivotal role in Sterling Sharpe's record-setting season. Lining up on the same side as Sharpe, Harris prevented defenses from ganging up on Sharpe.

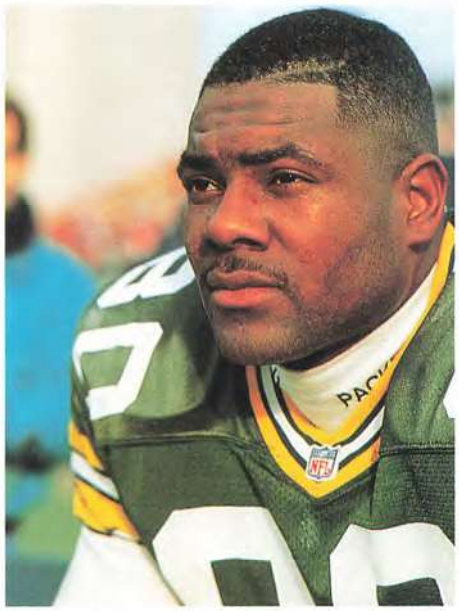
"Just being around a guy like Sterling you get that competitiveness he has and it spills over to the whole team," Harris said. "Mark Clayton's going to help us even more this year. I can't think of a better guy to take some of the pressure off Sterling."

While receptions were constantly on Harris' mind last season, he enjoyed a different type of reception during the offseason, involving wedding bells. Harris was married in late May to Letrece Scott, whom he met while attending Northeast Louisiana.

"She was only up in Green Bay once and it was pretty cold," said Harris. "But she'll get used to it."

She'd better. The Packers don't plan on letting Harris leave Green Bay for some time, having named him as one of the team's two transition players during the league's initial season of free agency. The possibility of spending the rest of his career in the NFL's smallest and perhaps coldest city, suits Harris just fine.

"When I was drafted by the Packers, my first thought was, 'Where's Green Bay?'" recalled Harris. "But with the coaching staff, players and fans that we have, I can't think of a better place to be right now."



"Jackie Harris can be as good as he wants to be," head coach Mike Holmgren has said of the fourth-year pro, who last season carved out his own niche among the NFL's tight end elite.

DALEY, BUCHANON, GRAY ENTER PACKER HALL

DALEY, the first member of the media ever to be installed in the Packer shrine, set the tone as the program's initial honoree.

"I feel I have been lucky all my life," said the man who has been chronicling and commenting upon the Packers' exploits for more than a half century, "and receiving this honor sort of tops the cake."

Proceeding to document his point, Daley went on to relate,

"While in high school in Fond du Lac (Wisconsin), one of my hangouts was the public library. I loved to read the big city newspapers and my pet subjects were Al Capone and the Chicago Cubs out of the Chicago Tribune. They also had the New York Times and one day on the sports page I saw a byline that read Arthur J. Daley, the very same name right down to the middle initial. It so happened a journalism course opened in school and I enrolled. I quickly forgot Capone and the other hoodlums and concentrated on writing sports. While still in school I pestered the people at the (Fond du Lac) Commonwealth Reporter and they relented, starting me at the princely salary of $12 per week."

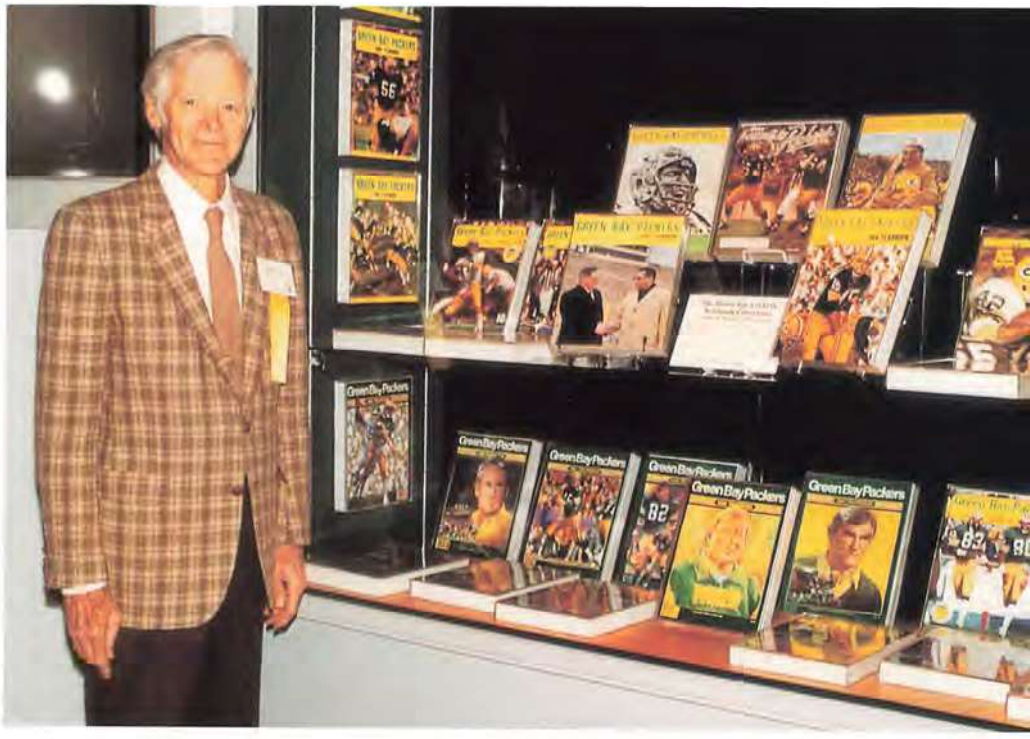
Thus was born what was to become a distinguished journalistic career, one which has seen Daley honored along the way with the Pro Football Hall of Fame's prestigious Dick McCann Award, presented for long and outstanding coverage of professional football.

"My big Packer break came in 1942 when I was assigned to cover the Packers," Daley recalled. "I got a little help from Curly Lambeau (the team's founder and first coach) who was very close to Mr. A. B. Turnbull, publisher of the P-G and first president of the Packers. Turnbull was the guy who first incorporated the Packers and he cautioned me with these words, 'Just remember we are very lucky to have a team like this in Green Bay. If we lose it we will never get it back. I want to make sure that you always boost the Packers.'"

Daley needed no such urging. As a profound loyalist, he couldn't have written anything negative about the Packers under any circumstances. And it was a fortunate state of affairs for the team because the Packers were to struggle, both artistically and financially over the next decade, and needed all the help they could get...to a point where they found it necessary to play a fund-raising intrasquad game on Thanksgiving Day in 1949 just to be able to finish the season—prior to staging a critical stock drive in 1950, which kept the franchise afloat until the NFL began to hit the television jackpot.

Art's longtime loyalty was richly rewarded in the '60s, when the Packers filled his cup to overflowing by winning five NFL championships in seven years and three in a row—accomplishments that have never been equaled.

Daley's contributions to the Packers have not been confined to his reportage in the Press-Gazette. At the beginning of what is now referred to as the "Lombardi Era," he launched the "Packer Yearbook," which proceeded to spread the Packer gospel to all 50 states and many foreign countries.



Art Daley, the first member of the media ever to be inducted into the Packer Hall of Fame, proudly poses in front of a display of Green Bay Packer Yearbooks. Daley founded the publication in 1960.

Before, and since his retirement from the newspaper, he likewise has continued to comment upon the Packer scene as a columnist for "Packer Report," a publication which covers the team on a weekly basis throughout the season.

Daley also has been a major contributor in another role—as a charter member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame board of selectors. His persistence and support have been a factor in the election of 18 former Packer players and coaches to the 'Hall,' the second largest such contingent representing any team.

BUCHANON, now a realtor in his native California, was a virtual shoo-in for the Packer Hall of Fame ever since he became Green Bay's first round draft choice out of San Diego State in 1972.

Willie admitted, in advance of the enshrinement ceremonies, that he had more or less counted upon being so recognized.

"I had anticipated sooner or later that I would possibly get this award," said Buchanon, a seven-year starter for the Packers (1972-78) who won Pro Bowl recognition in both 1974 and 1978. "It is an honor."

Willie credited his presenter, his secondary coach at San Diego State, current Los Angeles Rams offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese, with making it possible for him. "Ernie Zampese was the one responsible for putting me in that Green Bay Packer uniform," he said.

It was Zampese, he explained, who taught him the techniques he needed to thrive in college as well as in the NFL.

Commenting on his Green Bay experience, which he punctuated by forging an NFL record-tying four interceptions in a game against the San Diego Chargers in 1978, Buchanon said the Packer tradition "had a lot to do with" making Green Bay an attractive place to play. "But more so my teammates. All we had was each other. It was that togetherness that helped us play. I played on better teams in San Diego (he was traded to the Chargers in 1979) and we had good unity in San Diego, but it was never like the teams in Green Bay.

"We did everything together. Our peer pressure came from ourselves. The coaches actually couldn't put as much pressure as we put on ourselves as individuals—to perform for each other. You knew that if you screwed up you were going to get dogged by your teammates.

"We had an excellent defensive backfield. We had a good coach, Dick LeBeau, and good players. Every coach that coached me in Green Bay was a good coach."

As a member of the first Packer Hall of Fame class to receive the newly established HOF ring, in addition to the customary plaque, Buchanon was highly enthusiastic.

"I never got a ring for anything," he said. "This was a definite blessing. The first year they gave rings—this is good timing...It's something that will always be there."

GRAY, a free agent who beat heavy odds by becoming a starter at free safety in the very first game of his rookie season in 1975, also was equally elated over the ring as a symbol of his enshrinement.

"Man, now I have something to say, 'Hey, I was part of a football program,'" he effused. "This is going to be really neat. It's going to have my name on the side.

"It highlighted the whole year, the whole career. I miss the camaraderie. But it's like you're missing something. You played 10 years in the NFL and people say you're respected and you had a good career, but I'd say, 'Yeah, there's something missing.' I didn't get to go to the Pro Bowl or the Super Bowl. It's like I have nothing to show for it except some plaque. You need to have something that's more personal or something to display.

"That highlighted my career—having an induction ceremony and the ring...That definitely was the highlight of my career."

One of the most productive defenders in Packer history, Gray amassed nearly 800 tackles during his ten seasons (1975-84). The team's interception leader in both 1979 and 1980, he also was an exceptionally durable athlete, starting 99 consecutive games along the way.

Elated Willie Buchanon celebrates one of his 21 career interceptions—with the help of fellow defensive back Mike McCoy (29).

Johnnie Gray, collaborating with Rich Wingo, registers one of nearly 800 tackles he had during a nine-year career en route to the Packer Hall of Fame.

WORLD LEAGUE GAVE KOONCE A CAREER

by Pete Dougherty
Green Bay Press-Gazette

The short-lived World Football League probably gave George Koonce a career in the NFL.

Koonce has been one of the few to parlay a season in the WFL into a promising and probably long term job at the highest level of pro football.

He went from the Ohio Glory in 1992 to the Packers, where he has proven versatile enough at linebacker to play both inside and outside in 1992. And where he stands a good chance of cracking the starting lineup this season.

"If it would have been this year, I would have been out of the NFL," Koonce said. "I doubt I would have gotten back in."

Koonce joined the Packers anonymously last season. Acquisitions from the WFL don't get many headlines or much attention and he remained relatively unknown despite becoming a key contributor to the defense as the season wore on.

After finishing his college career at East Carolina, he had been cut by Atlanta just before the 1991 regular season started. He didn't play in the NFL that year but joined the Glory, and that spring went on to become one of the best players in the obscure league by leading it in tackles (109 in 10 games).

He made some noise in training camp, but about all anybody knew of him was that one fact. Whenever you saw or heard George Koonce's name it was, "George Koonce, the leading tackler in the World Football League."

If that individual title was the only thing that anybody knew about him, it was the playmaking he did to gain it that put Koonce over the hump and into the NFL.

He says he wasn't ready for the NFL in '91; he was for '92.

"I've seen football players dominate games in college and come into the pros and do good, and I felt like the World League was a step above college competition," he said. "I felt like I dominated some games, so I knew when I came into training camp that I could make plays; I knew I could. It wasn't, 'Well George, you might have made it.' I knew."

He finished the preseason relatively unknown but on the roster and with a new title that stuck to his name: George Koonce, the Packers' leading tackler in the preseason.

But it was really against the odds that he had joined Green Bay in the first place. He had offers from the Washington Redskins, Tampa Bay Buccaneers, New York Giants and Kansas City Chiefs as well, and on the surface, it might have looked like he had a better chance to make one of those teams.

Though Green Bay was coming off a 4-12 season, its one position that appeared to be solid was linebacker. Johnny Holland and Brian Noble were the starters inside, and the Packers took another inside linebacker, Mark D'Onofrio, in the second round of the draft.

Tony Bennett and Bryce Paup were entrenched as starters at outside linebacker.

Plus, Burnell Dent, Jeff Brady and Scott Stephen were veterans returning as backups.

But his coach with the Glory, former Dallas Cowboys defensive back Dennis Thurman, recommended he go to the Packers. Thurman knew Ray Rhodes, the Packers' defensive coordinator, and thought the defensive system Rhodes would bring from the San Francisco 49ers fit Koonce's abilities.

Koonce took Thurman's advice.

"He said, 'Just go up there and concentrate on what you do and everything will take care of itself,'" Koonce said. "Look what happened. I ended up leading the team in tackles in the preseason."

Koonce this year is back playing where he began last season, inside linebacker.

However, his move from inside to outside last year helped pick up their defense in midseason. Beginning with the seventh game against Chicago, Koonce started 10 straight games.

Koonce was fast enough to cover running backs on pass routes, so he could play outside. That allowed the Packers to shift Bryce Paup to better pass-rushing positions when he was healthy.

"They wanted to add speed to the defense," Koonce said. "I think Bryce was getting tired. They were asking a lot of him, rushing the passer a lot of times and then playing outside. It helped the team because we saved Bryce."

Koonce finished as the fifth leading tackler on the Packers with 53, including 1 1/2 sacks, and he also broke up two passes.

Now the Packers are moving him back to what they consider his most natural position, inside linebacker. He's big enough at 6-foot-1 and 238 pounds to handle the bigger blockers, and his speed will help the overall speed of the defense.

As a likely starter this year, perhaps he will be able to make a more recognizable name for himself. That would mark a change in his career, as he has been slighted some, beginning with his college days. He was not recruited by any Division I schools coming out of high school, so he went to Chowan (NC) Junior College, where former Packers Robert Brown and Jerry Holmes played.

Both North Carolina and East Carolina offered him scholarships when he finished at Chowan. He chose East Carolina, which is in Greensboro, NC, only 45 minutes from his home.

He was an unknown again coming out of East Carolina, going undrafted and signing as a free agent with the Falcons in '91.

But being cut by them probably was the best thing that ever happened to him in football. At East Carolina he was proven only as a pass rusher, and there still were questions about his speed and quickness after the Falcons cut him.

That fall, while preparing for the WFL, he got a chance to get stronger, and more importantly, he played a lot of basketball to improve his footwork.

He then made his one and only season in the World League count. Lucky for him the WFL was there; that was its final season.

"It's just like the baseball farm system," Koonce said. "You look at (the Detroit Tigers') Cecil Fielder: he played in Japan before coming back here and now he's the highest paid player in baseball."

George Koonce, a strong run player, puts a stop to Roger Craig (33) during the Packers' season finale at Minnesota.

(EX-WR) COREY HARRIS FINDS HIS NICHE– AT CORNER

by Kent Youngblood
Wisconsin State Journal

Corey Harris has a simple theory he uses to deal with the flotsam life doles out like so many roadblocks.

Harris' theory, simply stated: Don't waste time worrying about the things you can't control.

"And there are so many things," he says, "in life and in football, that you can't control."

And then there is Corey's corollary: Throw everything you have, your heart and soul, into what you do.

And every day Harris, a modern-day Renaissance man who is many things to many people—a counselor to children and an accomplished musician as well as a football player—lives this doctrine with the faith he learned growing up as a minister's son in Indianapolis.

This season, his second in the National Football League, Harris will throw his heart and soul into one of the biggest challenges of his 23-year-old life. After moving from wing back to receiver to running back in his four years at Vanderbilt University, Harris has moved again. This time to cornerback.

To a man, Packers coaches point to Harris' combination of speed, athletic ability and the decidedly defensive attitude he displayed last season when he led the Packers in special team tackles after being snatched off the waiver wire from Houston in October and say the move is a natural.

"The way I look at it," defensive coordinator Ray Rhodes says, "he was out of position. He should have been a defensive player all along."

Harris, of course, doesn't waste time worrying about the move; it was out of his control. He thinks only about what he can do to succeed. Again.

"In college, my first year, I was not a star," he says. "My whole job was blocking, blocking, blocking. My sophomore year I was a receiver and I was MVP of the team.

"I've been in the limelight and I've been in the background. I'm looking forward to it. If my role is to be a backup corner and a special teams guy, a nickel man or a starter, whatever. They know I'm going to go out there and give them 100 percent."

Because, for Harris, it is easy to put his heart into something he loves. And right now football tops that list.

"At this point in my career I'm in love with football," he says. "So as long as I get to play, that's what's important. Regardless of what position it is. I love the game that much and right now I just want to be on the field."

Corey Harris has a big heart. That was evident after the first test of his moxie as a rookie in the league.

Harris had just arrived in Houston, after a short holdout, as a third-round draft choice. The Oilers inserted him on the kick coverage team.

"As soon as I got there it was like 'OK, we're going to see what kind of heart he has,'" Harris remembers. "And it wasn't said, but I knew that's what they were thinking. They threw me in on a kickoff and I had never covered a kick in my life."

The result: "I go down and make the tackle at the 5-yard line," Harris remembers. "So now he has the heart to play professional football."

As a rookie wide receiver on a team loaded with talent at that position, Harris had found a niche: special teams. He found the job satisfying. Especially covering kicks.

"You know you're only going to be out there 10 or 11 plays a game," he says. "And it's your job to get taken out or to take two guys out. A lot of people disregard special teams."

Harris' approach did not go unnoticed. So when the Oilers tried to pass Harris through waivers in order to put him on their practice squad, the Packers pounced.

Ted Thompson, Green Bay's assistant director of pro personnel, says, "The first film I turned on, Corey returned a kickoff 98 yards against Kansas City. The play was called back, but you could see his athleticism. To claim someone in the middle of the season, you have to convince everyone the move is worthwhile. Because every time you do it, someone has to go. You have to be certain. In Corey's case, just from last year, it worked out. And it will even more in the long run."

"He's a relentless guy going to the football. And he's fearless."

In just 10 games, Harris led the Packers in kickoff returns with a 21.1-yard average. He also led the team in special teams tackles with 13. It was his tackle of Vai Sikahema at the 11-yard line on a kickoff that helped set up the winning field goal in the Packers' 27-24 victory over Philadelphia last Nov. 15 at Milwaukee County Stadium. The triumph was the beginning of a seven-game winning streak.

His play also prompted Packers coaches to talk about moving Harris to defense fulltime.

"As a special teams player he showed so much," Rhodes says. "He's the first one down in coverage. He has a great ability to break down and make tackles. He's a relentless guy going to the football. And he's fearless. Time and time again you saw him making solo tackles, big open field tackles. After you watch that for several weeks you start thinking, 'Hey, man, this guy should be a defensive back.'"

So the decision was made. At the Packers passing camp in the spring Harris was tried at safety. By the minicamp at the start of May, he was being used exclusively at cornerback, backing up Roland Mitchell on the right side.

"The temperament is there for the position," Rhodes says of Harris. "And he's very explosive. He comes out of breaks well. And you notice the work habits. Every time he touches the field he's at full speed. In the brief time he's worked there, he's head and shoulders above where I thought he would be.

"He'll go through training camp. He'll get a lot of action in preseason. A lot of action. You can assume he'll make a big contribution."

Corey Harris has a lot of soul.

You can hear it in his music. Harris started playing drums for the choir at his father's church when he was three years old. By age 12 he was playing the guitar. Along with some other former Vanderbilt players, he has a group, called Menage.

"I would say we have a feel like the Temptations," says Harris, who does much of the writing for the group. "It's R&B along the lines of Brian McKnight and After 7. It's a soothing kind of R&B."

Menage played at the National Summerlights Festival in Nashville, Tenn., over the summer.

You can also see Harris' soul in his love for children. Just ask James Threalkill, the community program director at the Edgehill Community Center, a housing project near Nashville. Threalkill will tell you about the time Harris put in at the center when Harris was completing his degree in human resources and early childhood development at Vanderbilt.

Harris not only led the Packers in kickoff returns with a 21.1-yard average, but led the special teams in tackles with 13. All this while only playing in 10 games for the Packers.

"He worked all summer," Threalkill said. "The kids developed a great deal of trust for him. After his tenure, he would return to visit and just get mobbed by the kids. He was like a pied piper."

Or ask Jewell Frazier, who is helping Harris with a Nashville program called "I Became A Star," which educates children about the prevention of AIDS and exposes some of the musical talent of young people to producers. Frazier also helped set up two college scholarships for minority students Harris decided to start—and fund—after he signed his first professional contract.

"He's just amazing," Frazier said. "He has impressed a wide range of young people."

Harris hopes to open a learning center for children in Nashville, one that will be income-based, for children who have been abused. The center will turn no one away.

To Harris, it is a simple matter of giving kids the help they need to control their own lives.

"You can take a poor child and make him a doctor," he said. "You can take a rich child and make him a thief. If you instill the right ideas in a child, and give him the opportunity, he can do what he really wants to do.

"How often do you get the opportunity to change somebody's life?"

Corey Harris has a lot of talent.

When Rhodes talks about what it takes to move from wide receiver to cornerback, he talks from experience. He made the same switch as a player, although his transition was a bit more sudden.

It happened when Rhodes was playing for the New York Giants in the 1970s. He was moved from wide receiver one week to cornerback the next.

"I was scared to death," says Rhodes, laughing at the memory. "I was a wide receiver against Miami and the next week I was starting at defensive back against Washington."

His first defensive assignment? Cover future Hall of Famer Charlie Taylor.

"I'll never forget the first play," Rhodes says. "They lined up and Billy Kilmer looks out at Taylor. And they started laughing. The whole world knew they were going to throw at me. As soon as the ball was snapped I backed up and started running. They threw an out on me."

"I'm excited for Corey. I see a diamond in the rough."

Rhodes made the move successfully. He says Harris should, too.

"It's a tough comparison to make," Rhodes says." "Corey is such a great athlete, he's a much better athlete than I was. It's not an easy move, but with his ability...I'm excited for Corey. I see a diamond in the rough."

A jewel that appears to have found the right setting.

"Now it's like you're on an island at corner," Harris said. "They're relying on you every play. It's just you and the receiver."

Which, of course, is perfect for Harris: A situation in which his fate rests in his own hands.

"That's great," he says. "I'm just going to get my fundamentals down. I'm going to be that type of player."

Versatile Corey Harris, now a cornerback, earned his spurs in 1992 as a kickoff returner. Here Harris, who closed out the season as the team's leader, displays his returning skills on an all-out runback against the Philadelphia Eagles.

RETIRED GENTILE FINDING HIS GRASS GREENER

by Al Pahl
Packer Report

Domenic Gentile, who retired as the Packers' head trainer following the 1992 season after 32 years of service, helps Dr. Patrick McKenzie minister to Brian Noble, who suffered a back injury in the Bear game October 25.

How many weeds will a lawn collect if it's neglected for 32 years?

Former Packer trainer Domenic Gentile says he's finding out this summer—his first since retiring following the 1992 season, after working 494 games without missing one.

"Domo" as he is best known to the hundreds of Packer players he ministered —all of them medically, many of them more personally—says he had to put a lawn in because it was overrun with weeds after he basically neglected it ever since joining the Packers on a part-time basis in 1961.

He also finally got around to adding a screen porch during his first summer away from football since joining the Packers on a full-time basis in 1969.

And he's found a bit more time for golf this summer, but not much. "I'm busier than hell," he said after a June trip to the links. "People are calling me every day for something."

Actually, he was busy almost as soon as—even before—he retired.

In December, the Professional Football Athletic Trainers Society (PFATS) honored Domo and then assistant, Kurt Fielding, as the NFL's "Training Staff of the Year."

On April 28, Gentile was presented with a special recognition award by the Lakeshore All Sports Hall of Fame during its annual awards dinner in Manitowoc.

Two days later, he was inducted into the Wisconsin Athletic Trainers Association's Hall of Fame during the WATA's annual meeting in Eau Claire.

By the end of June, Gentile was again a frequent sight at the Packer complex, working on putting the team's medical records in order. It is his plan to organize and computerize all of the Packer records, present and past.

An exhibit featuring John Kennedy

Gentile will continue working on an exhibit about former President John F. Kennedy's assassination.

At the time Kennedy was shot, Gentile was still a high-school history teacher. He quickly developed an after-hours project involving many of his students, who wrote letters to those involved.

"The responses were unbelievable," Gentile said. "We have stacks of letters from people like Oswald's mother, Oswald's wife, Oswald's brother, the sheriff and district attorney in Dallas; all the congressmen, Governor Connally, Robert Kennedy, Ted Kennedy.

"We never did get a response from Mrs. Kennedy.

"We had books, newspapers. The doctor who helped John Kennedy when he was in the hospital wrote us a nice little note about what he experienced there. Chief Justice Earl Warren sent us a nice letter. It was really interesting.

"It was just a great thing," Gentile said. "I am hoping that when they build this new library in Brown County somewhere, we could get it so we could have a permanent display. That would be great."

A book may be in Domo's future

He is also considering another major organizational project—the possibility of writing a book about his 32 years with the Packers.

"I'm looking at it, there's nothing definite," Gentile mused. "I think it would be fun, but I'm not definitely sure."

One thing's for sure: Nobody has spent more time with, and knows more "dirt" about, the Packer players who have came through 1265 Lombardi Ave, 1961-1992.

"Domenic knows it all," says former Packer Larry McCarren (1973-84). "If Domenic was a kiss-and-tell guy, he could write a best-seller.

"But he's not that kind of guy. He's honorable. If he was just out for Domo, he could write a very interesting book."

Therein lies the reason for Gentile's indecision about doing a book. While acknowledging most book promoters want the dirt on an author's subjects, he doesn't want to do a book that way.

Guard Rich Moran, who says he's spent the last three seasons trying to convince Gentile to write a book, believes Domo has plenty of material even without the seamy side.

Great insight into former Packers

"I've been getting taped in Domo's line for eight years," Moran said. "I always go and have Domo tape me. Once or twice a week, I would ask him about old great Packers; stories about what they were like. He always told me great stories and I've always liked that. He has such a great insight that you don't really get from a lot of people in this business because he has been so hands-on.

"He'd tell me about Forrest Gregg or Ray Nitschke. About what guys took good care of themselves or what guys wasted their careers. It was always interesting."

Present and former players begin by praising Gentile for his skills on the physical side but always end up talking about his total caring for them.

"He is very concerned about the players," former defensive end Robert Brown (1982-92) said. "He's a good man, very professional about his work. I've never seen him miss a day of work in my 11 years. He did the best he could preparing the players to play each week.

"His concern went beyond just the body of the players. He was very concerned about how you felt about the situation. And he was always honest about an injury. He was very sincere about that."

Said Moran, "He cared about you as a player and was never really up and down; he was always steady. He's got a good disposition for that job, considering all the emotional people you are dealing with.

"He always really stressed family. He's got a nice family. Domenic is a good, quality person. I don't think you get much finer."

Players brought Domo their problems

Gentile's caring does go far beyond the playing field. "I've walked into the training room and seen players actually in tears talking about their problems," McCarren said. "Domenic was the guy they went to. He was the one guy they could go talk to and they wouldn't have to be a rough, tough guy. They could be themselves."

Peggy Gentile, Domo's wife, agreed. "Domenic is a friend, counselor, confidante and father figure for many of the guys on the team," she was quoted as saying in a PFATS' publication. "Football can be hard on the players and their marriages. They turn to Domenic for advice, and he really helps them.

"I suppose they think he's a marriage expert because we've been married for 35 years," she added with a sly smile. "But I think we've stayed married so long because he is only home half the time."

A major reason Gentile was successful as an NFL trainer was that a big part of every evaluation every trainer makes is knowing his patient and dealing with the mental, as well as physical, side of the situation.

Master psychologist

Individuals have a wide variance in their pain tolerance and in their rate of healing — same injury, two players often means two different recovery periods.

"Some guys are always injured," Gentile observed. "Some guys are never injured. And many of the injured seem to find a way to come back to the game. Different players are so variant it's unbelievable.

"And pretty soon you know them all.

"A guy comes in on Thursday—I've had a guy here on this team come in on every Thursday with an injury. Every Thursday. That was his day to get hurt. I don't know if he was actually hurt or what, but he'd come in and say, 'My knee is killing me.'

"Okay, maybe an ultrasound treatment and some ice. Sunday, no problem at all. It was just one of those things that was the psyche of the player.

"I'm not a master psychologist but you have to learn the personnel that you're working with," Gentile said. "If you don't, you're not going to be successful. I've always tried to learn the people I was working with."

McCarren begs to differ on Gentile's self-diagnosis. "The thing people don't realize is Domo is a master psychologist," McCarren said. "He always had the right thing to say. There's always the question of whether you're going to be able to go or not. If you couldn't go, he wouldn't be one to shove you out there. But if you could go, he always knew what to say so you'd have the confidence that you weren't going to hurt yourself any more and that you'd be able to play well. That might be the coup de grace as far as being a trainer."

Custom fabrication shop

McCarren also pointed out, "One of the times he's at his best is if you need something unique in a way of a pad or shoe or something needs to be adjusted for an injury. I don't know how he learned this, but he's a great designer. One time he designed a cast I could wear on my hand so I could snap the ball without breaking the quarterback's hands. He stayed until like 9 p.m.

"He was really good at that. Another time, he invented a boot so a guy with a real bad lower leg could still play."

And then there was the time Bart Starr had an injured throwing shoulder and Gentile invested from 7:30 p.m. until 1 a.m. practicing various taping strategies —using his wife, Peggy, as a model. Starr had a problem with two shoulder muscles and a separate problem with a tendon. The latter "complicated it because you had to maintain his range of motion, but still you had to tape in two different directions," Gentile recalled. "That was my problem. I couldn't get that to work.

"You are always building a pad or forming a pad or taping a shoulder. For instance, Tootie Robbins (1992), we had to tape his shoulder down. We had to practically nail it down so he could play."

'A guy who damn well did his best'

And it's things like that which form how Gentile would like to be remembered:

"I just think I'd like to be remembered as a guy who damn well did his best for the team," Gentile said. "To work for seven different coaching staffs is an experience, starting with Lombardi and ending up with Mike Holmgren. They were all hard-working men. They tried to do the best they could under circumstances. I enjoyed working with all of them. Everybody was a little different in how they approached the game but they were pretty much doing a job where they had to sacrifice a whole lot of life in order to attempt to be successful."

It was Lombardi who hired him back in '61. At the time, Gentile was history teacher, basketball coach, athletic trainer and athletic director at West DePere High School in the Green Bay suburb of DePere.

Six minutes with Lombardi

Bud Jorgensen was the Packers' trainer and also worked the off-seasons as a salesman for Bertrand's Sport Shop in Green Bay. Jorgensen called on Gentile because he was an athletic director. "He came in one day and said 'Doggone it, I need an assistant.'" Gentile recalled. "'I know you do all the taping and work with the kids here, you must have some experience. Why don't you call Coach Lombardi and get an interview?'

"And so I did.

"I sat down and had about a six-minute interview. That's about all it was," Gentile related. "He got up and said, 'Well, I think you're my guy.' We shook hands and I left."

All of which was not as easy as it might sound. Despite the fact Lombardi had been here only two years, Gentile said it was scary just calling to ask for the interview because "he was a legend already. Here he takes a team that had won one game the previous year (1958) and comes up with a 7-5 record ('59). The next year, he goes to the playoffs and the Championship game. Yeah, it was a little scary just calling him up.

"And he was the kind of guy that didn't make you feel at ease really. He had the same fire in his eye when he was just sitting there talking about how he wanted things done. It wasn't a nice conversation. He could be very, very stern."

Gentile obviously survived.

Dominic Gentile, with wife Peggy at his side, is surrounded by his family after being honored for his long service to the Packers during pre-game ceremonies in Lambeau Field December 20. His grandson, Ryan, holds the plaque presented to him by the Packers.

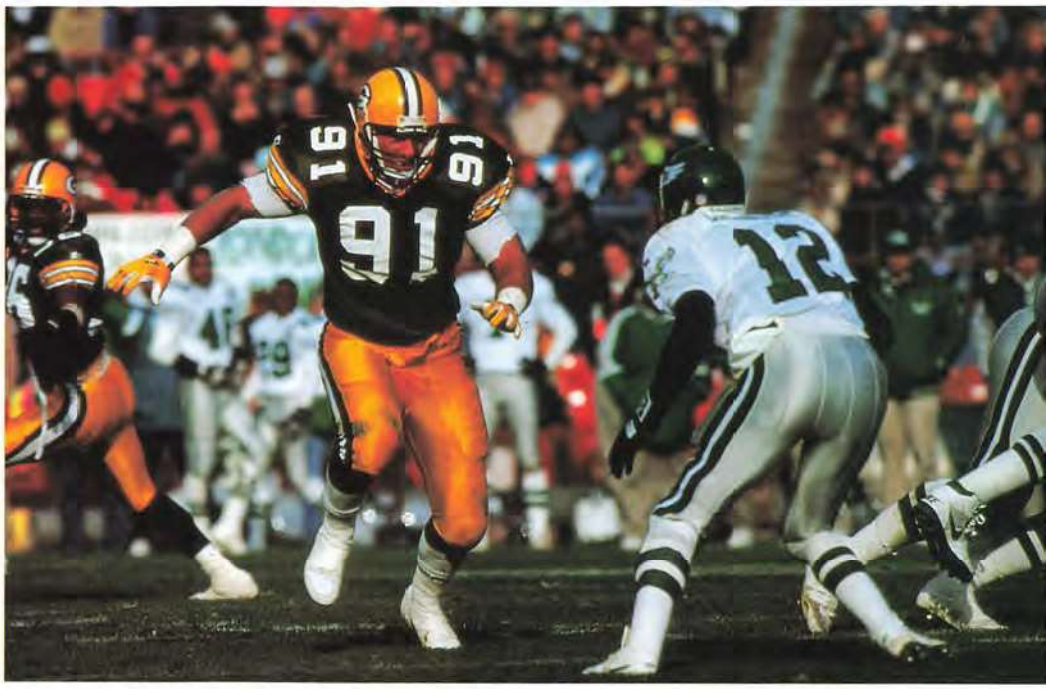
Running back Edgar Bennett became the first Packer rookie since 1979 to register a 100-yard rushing game when he ran for 107-yards in 29 attempts vs. the Chicago Bears.



A vigilant Brian Noble, back in action after a two-week absence with a back injury, hones in on Eagle quarterback Randall Cunningham, wary of Cunningham's celebrated scrambling ability.

Tony Bennett's target is Viking quarterback Sean Salisbury, who became number 90's last sack victim of the 1992 season. Bennett felled Salisbury for a 10-yard loss in the second quarter, swelling his team-leading total to a career-high 13 1/2.

Frank Winters, clearing a path for Darrell Thompson, was a valuable Plan B addition in 1992. Winters handled all the long-snapping duties, started 8 games at left guard and 3 others at center after injuries to both Rich Moran and James Campen.

RARE ROLE: THE PACKERS ARE FAVORED

Times, it appears, have changed around the National Football Conference's Central Division. Accordingly, the Green Bay Packers and their loyalists are somewhat euphoric about it.

In 1993, the Green and Gold find themselves in an unaccustomed role—that of favorite to win the division championship, most recently their property in 1972, a generation ago.

It has been almost as long a time, in truth, since the Packers have been regarded as prime contenders. But seldom during that 21-year span have they appeared better equipped to assume the favorite's mantle than they are as they enter their second season under Coach Mike Holmgren.

The current and accepted formula for NFL success calls for a franchise quarterback and a tightfisted defense as the essential elements. As their 75th season dawns, the Packers have good reason to believe they have both dimensions.

Youthful Brett Favre, for example, has presumably fulfilled the first qualification, having established himself as a field general of top rank after taking over as Green Bay's starting quarterback in 1992 following an early season injury to Don Majkowski.

In addition to leading the Packers to a 9-7 record, their second best reading since 1972, the swashbuckling Mississippian set an all-time Packer single season passing efficiency record (64.11) while positioning himself among the NFL's premier quarterbacks in terms of completions (302, tied for 2nd), touchdown passes (18, tied for 5th) and—significantly—percentage of interceptions (2.8, third).

There also is the impression that the defense has been upgraded to contender quality with the addition of the redoubtable Reggie White and two other highly regarded unrestricted free agents, nose tackle Bill Maas, and free safety Mike Prior.

Promising as the approaching autumn appears to be from the Packer perspective, however, the Green and Gold are keenly aware they need to prove a point on the field before they can hope to win their first division title since '72. The Bears, Lions and Buccaneers aside—and they all figure to be highly competitive—the Packers have to establish that they can beat the Vikings, who swept their home-and-home series in 1992, winning the rematch in their mutual season finale to deprive the Packers of the NFC's Central crown and a playoff berth.

"For Kids' Sake, Sack 'Em"

Join the Sack 'Em Club and help the kids

Double your fun during the 1993 season!

As a club member, you pledge to donate $1 ($100 for businesses) to Children's Hospital of Wisconsin every time the Packers make a sack.

Your gift will be used to help care for children with malignant tumors, leukemia and other forms of cancer.

And, once your pledge is paid, you'll have the chance to win some great prizes.

Sign up for the Sack 'Em Club today. The kids are counting on you.

Denver quarterback John Elway, an 11-year veteran, will make his first Green Bay appearance of his pro career when the Broncos visit Lambeau Field Sunday night, October 10th.

PACKERS GO 'PRIME TIME'

With apologies to Gertrude Stein, it might be said, "A schedule is a schedule is a schedule..."

Essentially true, with an occasional exception—such as the intriguing and historic agenda allotted to the Packers for the 1993 National Football League season.

—Historically speaking, it finds the Packers playing the first Sunday night home game in team annals (vs. the Denver Broncos in Green Bay on TNT the night of October 10) and playing their latest regular season home date ever (hosting the Los Angeles Raiders Sunday afternoon, December 26). It will be the Broncos' first regular season visit to Lambeau Field in series history.

—Additionally, the Packers will be making two other prime time television appearances—giving them three such national "showcases" for the first time since 1982—including their first on "Monday Night Football" since 1986 (at Kansas City November 8).

—Not to mention from the competitive perspective, they will be encountering no fewer than five of 1992's playoff teams along the way, including the reigning Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys, New Orleans Saints, Kansas City Chiefs, San Diego Chargers and defending NFC Central Division champion Minnesota, a customary home-and-home opponent.

—If this were not sufficient to set this year's schedule apart, the Green and Gold also will be making their first opening day appearance at Milwaukee County Stadium since 1982 and paying their first visit to San Diego in 15 years (December 12) when they oppose the reigning AFC Western Division kingpins on a national cablecast (ESPN).

—Further, the Packers' Lambeau Field inaugural September 12 is likely to elicit national attention since Reggie White, easily the NFL's most sought after athlete when free agency was implemented last February, will be wearing a Green Bay uniform and facing his old Philadelphia Eagles teammates for the first time since becoming a Packer last April.

The Eagles will be making their fourth straight appearance on Green Bay's schedule and paying their second visit to Lambeau Field in the past three years.

—Appropriately enough, the Packers will be entertaining the Chicago Bears Halloween afternoon (October 31) when they come together for the 145th time in professional football's storied rivalry.

—League history also will be made. For the first time ever, all NFL teams will be assigned two byes during the course of the '93 schedule. The Packers will draw theirs Sunday, September 19, and Sunday, October 17.

The opening day date in Milwaukee against the Rams finds the Packers facing a surprisingly familiar foe, since they will be facing their brethren from the NFC's Western Division for the sixth consecutive year. Surprisingly familiar because, during the mid-'80s, they encountered the Californians only once in a three-year span.

Speaking of the Golden State, the Packers will be opening and closing their '93 home schedule against California teams, debuting against the Rams September 5 and wrapping up their regular season exertions against the Raiders December 26.

Through a quirk in the schedule, the Packers also were to open their preseason schedule against the Raiders in the annual Hall of Fame Game at Canton, OH (July 31).

History was made the last time the Packers launched a season against the Rams at Milwaukee. The date was September 12, 1982 and the Packers had fallen behind 23-0 by halftime. Following the intermission, however, they mounted what remains the biggest comeback in their history, scoring 35 unanswered points to depart with a 35-23 victory.

A key matchup, on the heels of the Packers' first NFC Central test of the season (at Minnesota September 26), will take the Packers to Dallas for the first time since 1989 on Sunday afternoon, October 3, a day on which the Green and Gold should get a reading on their playoff aspirations.

CAMRY

While virtually any car will get you to and from work, few will actually move you like the 1993 Toyota Camry LE V6.

It starts the moment you turn the ignition. You feel the powerful (yet amazingly quiet) 185-hp, 24-valve V6 engine spring to life. As you quickly gather momentum, the 4-speed electronically controlled automatic overdrive transmission (ECT) shifts smoothly. Almost imperceptibly. Your adrenaline begins to rise. The variable-assist power rack-and-pinion steering sends a message to your brain: You are in control. And loving it. You settle into a rhythm of straightaways and turns. The Camry's 4-wheel independent suspension responds to each. Beautifully.

Then, all too soon, your ride to work has ended. You take comfort in just one thought: there's still the trip home. Call 1-800-GO-TOYOTA for a brochure and location of your nearest dealer.

WHAT OTHERS CALL A COMMUTE, YOU'LL CONSIDER A JOYRIDE.
